ALDERMEN HEAD OFF DR. COON IN COFFIN'S OFFICE

Rush Inquiry Into Tuberculosis Sanitarium for Monday Report.

M'COID IS SQUELCHED.

Some stirring things—one a threatened personal encounter between Ald. Capitain and Attorney Arthur B. McCoid, representing Mayor Thompson—happened in the city hall yesterday afternoon when the finance committee of the city council began its investigation of the municipal tuberculosis sanitarium.

An exciting race for possession of the sanitarium's books and records was almost won by Capt. Percy B. Coffin of the civil service commission, being at the last turned into a victory for the aldermen who snatched the books away from under Capt. Coffin's nose and carried to the committee rooms with them.

MANY IN FIGHT.

Subpoenas were disregarded, aldermen took part in the chase, representatives of civic societies joined in the fight, and bitter words were passed between the partisans of Dr. Sachs, the recent suicide, and friends of Mayor Thompson.

Doors were slammed in the faces of the aldermen in the civil service commission rooms, loud voices broke the silence of the half-holiday in the hall, partisans of either side rushed for elevators, and finally, when the smoke cleared late at night, the aldermen were in complete possession of the situation.

Under their direction, Maj. James Miles, head of the council committee's efficiency staff, and a corps of assistants jumped into automobiles and dashed for the sanitarium at a late hour, with the books and records over which they had fought during the afternoon, and Supt. J. W. Coon bouncing up and down in the rear seat as they broke several speed records.

OUT TO BEAT MERIT INQUIRY.

Arrived at the sanitarium, they began an investigation of the books intending to report to the council committee tomorrow morning if working day and night in the meantime will accomplish their object.

The plan is to have the books audited from end to end before the civil service commission, acting under instructions from Mayor Thompson, will have an opportunity to scrutinize them.

It was Capt. Coffin's plan to get possession of the books, lock them up in the vaults over Sunday, and begin an audit of them tomorrow.

It was the receipt of this information, tipped off to the council committee from the sanitarium, that precipitated the stirring events that kept several digni-

PRIMARIES ON TUESDAY TO PICK DELEGATES AND PARTY MACHINERY

State-wide primaries will be held in Illinois next Tuesday. In Chicago the polls will be open from 6 a. m. to 5 p. m.

Committeemen—ward and state—of both big parties are to be chosen, and registered male voters may participate in these selections, adhering to the party of their own selection for the two year period.

The voters at these primaries are also to select district delegates and delegates at large to the national conventions, and also presidential electors.

Women cannot vote except on the presidential preference ballots. On these each party has but one candidate.

"EXCHEQUER" MAKES GIRL COUNTY SPELLING CHAMPION

Christina Remers of Barrington Wins Title After Spelldown on Paper—Jules Martin Second.

Christina Remers of Barrington was named champion speller of the Cook county schools yesterday at the close of a contest held under the direction of the county superintendent of schools. The runners-up in the contest were Jules Martin, from Worth, who was awarded second place, and Anna Mueller of Niles Center, who received third place.

It was the word "exchequer" that gave Miss Remers the championship. The contest was a written one, and not the old time spelling bee in which the person who misspelled a word took his seat.

In spite of her championship honors Miss Remers misspelled "cymbal," "avocation," and "chrysolite." The others misspelled those three words and "exchequer" as well. The three best spellers from each of the five divisions of the county were sent to the county superintendent's office to take part in the contest. The following words caused the downfall of the other contestants: Adamantine, consanguinity, counselor, allotment, expiation, and ferocious.

POST'S WIDOW IS MARRIED TO HER HOTEL MANAGER.

L. J. Montgomery Weds Woman Who Was Left Battle Creek Manufacturer's Millions.

Battle Creek, Mich., April 8.—Mrs. Leila Y. Post, widow of the late Charles W. Post, originator of Battle Creek's cereal food industry, and L. J. Montgomery, manager of the Post tavern, were married at 11 o'clock today at the bride's apartments at the tavern, the Rev. W. S. Potter, Presbyterian, officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery will make their permanent home in Battle Creek.

Mrs. Montgomery is a Battle Creek girl and was married to C. W. Post twelve years ago. Mr. Post died at Santa Barbara, Cal., May 9, 1914, leaving an estate of between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000, which was divided between his widow and daughter.

DUCK A CHAMPION LAYER.

Peggy, of Doubtful Ancestry, Beats Record Which Was Made by $10,000 Fowl.

Verona, N. J., April 8.—Peggy, a Rouen duck of doubtful ancestry, is the champion egg layer of the world, if the claims of her owner, Mrs. Sarah Bannister, are accurate. Peggy, in the period from Jan. 12, 1914, to Dec. 23, 1915, laid 325 eggs, fifteen more than Lady Eglantine, the $10,000 white leghorn hen, laid in her best year. Since Feb. 1, this year, Peggy has been laying an egg a day.

MRS. BISHOP QUITS "FAST", APPETITE GONE

Admits 33 Cent Diet Is a Fizzle and Urges More Firesides.

GIRL'S LIFE IS DREARY.

Mrs. L. Brackett Bishop is once more anchored in comfort at the Chicago Beach hotel—much wiser from a week's excursion into the haunts of the working girl. Among other things, she has changed her mind about the "deliciously satisfying 33 cent meals." Under present conditions, the appetites of working girls require an outlay of more than 33 cents a day for nourishment, she believes.

While she was at no time hungry during her experiment, she had a feeling that it was an awful bother to eat. And she lost her appetite for the working girl's bill of fare before the week was up.

HER VIEWS AFTER TRIAL.

This is Mrs. Bishop's statement of the result of her week's investigation:

"The tremendous maelstrom, the undertow of human needs—inadequately provided for by our civilization—is an awful thing when it has a grip upon you. I wonder how girls keep alive under these conditions. There is no healing in any intelligence for it—but all must get back to fundamental principles of old mother nature. Although nothing offended me in the places where girls ate their meals, the food did not come up to my expectations. 'I want nothing to eat today,' was the way I felt.

"The flavor of home bread and gravies was lacking, along with the social life of the table. There was no nourishment for the soul as in a home. Food cooked in large quantities also is never quite the same as at home. I had no zest for eating—at all. After the first day or two I lost my appetite.

GOING OUT A NUISANCE.

"There is too much of war made of life when a girl has only 33 cents a day to spend for her meals. Then the going out to restaurants makes it too much of a bother to eat.

"I slept the first night in the overflow house of the Y. W. C. A. I was in a tiny hall bedroom, just large enough for a cot and a chair. Here I found security and protection for the night. I had my breakfast, for 5 cents, of coffee and two rolls.

"The next night I slept in the Sarah Hackett Stevenson Memorial lodging house at Twenty-fourth street and Prairie avenue for 15 cents. For years I had been a member of the board of directors, but really never knew before what a haven of rest it really is, and since the establishment of the nursery it is much more attractive with twenty-six babies.

PLAYED WITH BABIES.

"I played with the babies, and never ate such an enjoyable breakfast. It was the first meal I had had uninterrupted by telephone calls in a long time. And I never had such an allowance of leisure to eat as in the lodging house that morning at an outlay of 5 cents.

"I passed the third night at the Home of the Friendless and had everything without price, both for the physical and spiritual comfort. I found every comfort and sympathy here.

"The fourth night I remained up and ate supper at midnight with the telephone girls. I watched them coming from their tasks. I was struck with wonder at the safety of the streets at that time of night. The girls were so sunny I thought of the fine companions and homes going to waste.

GIRL TAKES HER IN.

"I went home with a little worker on the north side and spent the night in a pink bell bedroom. It had a bright, festive air, and the way I was accepted in faith—a stranger—was one of the wonders of the week.

"I ate my breakfast at 8 o'clock in a lunchroom where most bought nothing but coffee and rolls. They ate as if they were machines—in feverish haste to be off to the morning's work at the office. These

'Wild Bob' Burman and Chicago Boy Die in Auto Crash

Corona Guard Also Killed When Demon Plunges into Crowd; 5 Hurt.

BAD TIRE; THEN SPILL

Corona, Cal., April 8.—(Special.)—"Wild Bob" Burman of Detroit, Mechanician Eric Schrader of Chicago, and Track Policeman W. H. Speer, dead, and five spectators injured, three of whom may die—that made up the tragedy that wound up the third annual Corona road race today.

Burman suffered a fractured skull, several ribs were crushed and both legs were broken. Burman died in the City hospital at Riverside, where he was taken from the track. Mrs. Burman was with her husband soon after the accident and remained with him until he died.

RACE GOES TO O'DONNELL.

Incidentally Eddie O'Donnell, in a Dusenberg car, won the $5,000 prize, making an average speed of 86.5 for the 301 miles. Joe Thomas in a Mercer was second and Eddie Pullen, Thomas' teammate trailed in third. Tetsiaff and Durand finished fourth and fifth respectively.

Burman's car blew out a tire in the ninety-seventh lap as it was rounding a curve at a speed estimated at 100 miles an hour. The speeding machine skidded upon a culvert, turned completely over and crashed past two telephone poles into a throng of spectators. Schrader was dashed to the ground and sustained a fractured skull and a broken leg. He died five minutes afterward. He lives at 423 Belmont avenue, Chicago.

CRUSHES TRACK GUARD.

In its wild flight Burman's Peugeot wrecked an automobile beside which Speer was standing. The policeman was terribly mangled and died a few minutes later.

Burman was fourth to the last of the drivers and about six laps back of O'Donnell when the crash occurred. All during the race he played in hard luck. Time after time he was forced to stop at the pit for tire changes or because of mechanical trouble.

The Burman accident happened almost at the same time an unidentified woman ran down a man on the aqueduct leaving Corona. The man's skull was fractured and it is believed he will die.

NO LETUP IN SPEED.

Eddie O'Donnell, winner of the race, was just entering his last lap when the Burman accident happened. He did not cut down his speed, and neither did the others who were fighting for other divisions of the purse.

Twelve starters got away in the race, crossing the line three abreast and running fifty miles an hour. The pace became a terrific one right off the start.

At ten laps Eddie Pullen, in a Mercer, was leading the field with an average of 97.7 miles an hour. Earl Cooper, in a Stutz, Joe Thomas, and Eddie O'Donnell were trailing, but well bunched. The pace continued, and when the 100 mile mark was reached the average was close to 95 miles. The second hundred reduced the average and the third hundred did likewise.

EARNED NAME "WILD BOB."

In Bob Burman the automobile racing game lost its most spectacular driver and the most fearless man that ever challenged time and distance with a motor car. "Wild Bob" Burman he was called, and he deserved the name. A driver who asked no quarter of his car and gave none, Burman was noted more for his disregard of danger than for his triumphs.

His most famous achievement was his world's record drive against time at Daytona, Fla., in April, 1911, when at the wheel of the Blitzen Benz, he covered a mile at an average of 142 miles an hour.

BEGAN CAREER IN 1907.

Bob Burman left his father's farm, about fourteen miles from Lansing, Mich., in 1907, and entered the employ of the Jackson company. With a Jackson car he won his first race, a twenty-four hour contest held at St. Louis.

In 1908 Burman joined the Buick company. He won eighteen or nineteen track races during the season.

Burman was slightly hurt on two occasions in 1910, once on the three-quarter mile track at San Antonio and again during a special challenge race at Savannah.

Burman was married twice.

'ARTFUL DODGER'S' 75 YEARS SLOW UP HIS ARTFULNESS.

Found with Hand Under Man's Pillow, He Fails to Get to Door Before Intended Victim.

"Nick" Moran, at 75 years of age still the "artful dodger," was arrested yesterday because he is not as nimble as of yore.

F. C. Hawley, an officer of the Walden W. Shaw company, was sleeping on the fourth floor of the Morrison hotel when he felt a hand under his pillow where nestled some $600.

"What's the idea?" he demanded sleepily.

"Time to wake up," said the visitor, at 7 o'clock in the morning.

"Who told you to butt in here?" asked the sleepy Hawley.

"They sent me up from downstairs," said the "artful dodger," as he edged toward the door. But Hawley beat him to it and locked the door. Then he called the police.

Moran has a "two page record" of sentences to Joliet and the bridewell.

LIFEBOAT WRECKAGE FOUND; WASHED OFF SHIP IN GALE.

Small Craft of Fruit Steamer Anna C. Wilson Found in Lake, but Vessel Arrived Safely.

Evidence of a supposed lake tragedy came to light yesterday when Julius Knudsen and his son, Carl, both of them fishermen, found four or five miles off the South Chicago breakwater the wreckage of a lifeboat that had belonged to the steamer Anna C. Wilson. Near Indiana Harbor Karl Johnson found another lifeboat of the same steamer.

Capt. W. P. Wilson, who had named his fruit steamer after his mother, said yesterday it had reached Chicago safely on Thursday, but only after a terrific gale in which a heavy sea tore away the two small boats.

CONFESSES $200,000 LOOT OF NEW YORK MAIL TRUCK.

Prisoner, Taken in San Diego, Says Haul Included Four Packages of Notes, One of Jewelry.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 8.—Approximately $200,000, consisting of four packages of federal reserve notes and one package of jewelry, was the loot taken by James Moran, alias A. G. Maggs, and three companions from a mail truck in New York Feb. 26, according to a confession which the federal officers said the prisoner made here late today.

Moran was said to have told the officers today that he and his companions had expected to get $1,000,000, but that they were unable to find more than the five packages of valuables.

Moran was brought here today from San Diego, where he surrendered last night to government authorities.

C. E. Webster, chief postal inspector, said he believed approximately $200,000 was the amount taken by the robbers, as this sum tallies with the amounts reported missing by the postal authorities.

U.S. MUST JUDGE BERLIN'S DENIAL IN SUSSEX CASE

Wilson to Decide if Evidence Supports Claim or Warrants Break.

PAPERS DUE TODAY.

EUROPEAN WAR SUMMARY

Germans take French trenches on front of more than a mile near Haucourt, northwest of Verdun.

Austrian transport sunk by French submarine in Adriatic.

Italians start preliminaries to general offensive planned at Paris conference of allies. Sharp skirmishes and artillery actions mark day's events.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—... many's disclaimer of responsibility ... the destruction of the channel liner Sussex surrounds the position of the United States in the present submarine situation with further difficulties and may turn action, if any be taken, from the Sussex case itself to the accumulation of ships destroyed without warning since Germany gave assurances governing the submarine campaign.

Before the next step is taken the collection of evidence, intended to prove legally that the Sussex was destroyed by a German submarine, will have to proceed further.

GET EVIDENCE TOMORROW.

Additional evidence in the form of affidavits and statements gathered by the American embassy in Paris is arriving on the steamer St. Paul, due in New York tomorrow, and will be in President Wilson's hands on Monday. The situation will be thoroughly discussed at Tuesday's cabinet meeting, and soon afterward a decision on the next step is expected.

The apparent difficulties of proving the Sussex case alone leads many officials close to the president to believe the decision will hinge on consideration of cumulative evidence that Germany's promises are being disregarded by her submarine commanders. On the strength of that evidence will depend what steps, if any, the United States will take at this time.

MUST HAVE FIRM GROUNDS.

The United States was described officially tonight as being placed in the position of a judge of a court of law. On the evidence a decision will be reached and the United States will be absolutely sure that it stands on firm ground before rendering one. The final decision will be rendered by President Wilson. It is likely that if drastic action is called for, congress will be consulted.

Secretary of State Lansing and other members of the war faction in the cabinet regard the evidence so far received conclusive of German guilt. They are in favor of severing diplomatic relations with Berlin or sending an ultimatum stating that another offense will cause a rupture.

diplomatic procrastination as a means of lulling Washington into believing that the near future would see the submarine issue satisfactorily adjusted. He reported that in his talks with German officials he heard the same promises, but always vague and without anything definite except the statement that if American lives were lost through mistakes of submarine commanders Germany would willingly make amends.

German officials averred, Col. House said, that Germans abhorred the idea of attacking passenger ships at all. In cases where such attacks occurred—if they did occur—it was because of the enemy's disregard for the safety of neutrals by permitting them to travel on ships carrying munitions or on ships which had been in war service or might be mistaken for ships in the enemy's war service by German submarine commanders.

REGARDS PROMISES FUTILE.

Col. House has spent much time in London since the outbreak of the war and has generally been the guest of Ambassador Page at London. No one has been more scrupulously neutral in his official actions since the war began than Ambassador Page. But no one, it is frankly stated, has been more convinced than he of the futility of German promises and the insincerity of Germany's proposals to modify the submarine campaign.

In his semi-official capacity Col. House has followed the example of Ambassador Page. But his confidential advice to President Wilson is understood to have been extremely frank and not designed to help Germany's side of the submarine controversy. Col. House is a great admirer of Ambassador Page and obtained his views on the submarine question just before reporting to President Wilson on the completion of his last trip abroad.

GERMANY DENIES GUILT.

BERLIN, April 8.—The German government is able to announce that no German submarine or warship was responsible for the explosion which damaged the British steamship Sussex.

The Associated Press was authoritatively informed today that the investigation now has been completed; that all the craft which might possibly have been involved in an attack on the Sussex have reported, and that from the reports of their commanders it is absolutely certain that the Sussex was not destroyed by a German torpedo and that Germany is in no wise responsible for the disaster.

From the material at hand it will also be possible to reply to the American inquiries regarding the steamers Englishman, Manchester Engineer, Eagle Point, and Berwinvale and establish, according to the German contention, that no blame attaches to Germany.

Denies Sinking Dutch Steamer.

THE HAGUE, April 8.—The German foreign office today informed the Dutch minister to Berlin that no German submarine was in the vicinity of Galloper lightship when the Dutch steamer Palembang was sunk.

The Dutch government had made formal inquiry as to whether the Palembang was sunk by a submarine.

AUSTRIAN TRANSPORT SUNK.

PARIS, April 8.—A French submarine has sunk an Austrian transport in the Adriatic. The first official announcement from the ministry of marine gave no particulars as to loss of life.

Turk Cruiser Damaged.

ROME, April 8.—The Turkish cruiser Midullu, formerly the German Breslau, has been badly damaged in a naval encounter off the Bosphorus.

Four British Ships Lost.

LONDON, April 8.—Four British vessels, including the liner Chantala, have been sunk or blown up within the last twenty-four hours. Nine of the crew of the Chantala were drowned.

The Chantala, a 5,000 ton liner owned by the British India Steam Navigation company, and in service between Indian and English ports, was sunk, the press bureau stated. The Chantala was built in 1913, was 405 feet long and equipped along modern lines.

The 5,000 ton steamer Braunton, 380 feet long, and owned at Cardiff, and the small Faversham schooner Clyde were blown up. The fishing vessel Sainte Marie also was lost.

No Warning to Steamer.

ROTTERDAM, April 8.—Dispatches to the Norwegian consul today confirmed the report that the Norwegian steamer Arena, sunk last Sunday, was torpedoed without warning

GERMANS SEIZE FOES' TRENCHES ON WIDE FRONT

Advance from Haucourt Takes Besiegers Closer to Fortress of Verdun.

LONDON, April 8.—German troops have captured French positions for a width of more than a mile on the ridge of Termiten hill, south of Haucourt and northwest of Verdun, the Berlin war office announced today.

This advance places in greater peril the French troops which are holding the salient at Bethincourt, which is only eight miles northwest of Verdun proper.

A simultaneous attack was made on the eastern side of the triangle, but was repulsed. The French had the better of grenade fighting to the southeast of Bethincourt.

German Official Report.

The official statement issued by the general army headquarters in Berlin says:

On the left bank of the Meuse Silesian and Bavarian troops took by storm a strong French point of support south of Haucourt. They captured the entire enemy position on the ridge of Termiten hill, extending over a width of more than two kilometers. A counter attack failed. The losses of the enemy, owing partly to the treacherous behavior of some, were heavy. In addition to those, fifteen officers and 699 men were captured uninjured, including numerous recruits of the class of 1916.

On Hilsen ridge, south of Sondernach, in the Vosges, a small German detachment came upon an advanced French position, the occupants of which were killed, with the exception of thirty-one men who were captured. The enemy's trenches were blown up.

French Official Report.

PARIS, April 8.—The latest official communication issued by the war office follows:

South of the Avre the fire of our artillery destroyed the St. Aurin mill where there was an observatory, and shattered the enemy trenches north of Beauvraignes.

In Champagne in the region of Navarin we replied by a curtain of fire to a violent bombardment which presaged an attack. The enemy did not leave his trenches.

In the Argonne we directed a concentrated fire on the enemy batteries in the Cheppy wood and in the region of Montfaucon and Malancourt.

In the region of Verdun there was no event of importance save a somewhat spirited bombardment of our front comprising Bethincourt, Le Mort Homme, and Cumieres.

In the Vosges our artillery was very active in the Fecht valley.

U. S. TROOPS IN FINAL DASH TO CAPTURE VILLA

Supreme Effort Being Made Before Revolt Against Carranza Crops Up.

BULLETIN.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—The first official utterance indicating the expectation of capturing Villa soon came from Secretary Baker this afternoon. He said:

"I think we are on a warm trail, and I hope to have good information soon."

BY E. T. CONKLE.

[UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

El Paso, Tex., April 8.—A desperate, sustained effort is being made by the American expedition to capture or kill Villa quickly.

Danger of Carranza being unable much longer to control some of his generals who oppose the presence of United States troops on Mexican soil has given the American pursuit an impetus which has thrown the border into tense excitement over prospects of immediate success of Gen. Pershing's object.

CARRANZA FACES REVOLT.

The highest official authorities here admitted tonight that unless Villa is caught soon the United States must withdraw its troops from Mexico or Carranza will face a revolt of nearly all his generals. Hence the admitted anxiety on the part of the American forces to finish the job.

Brig. Gen. George Bell Jr. was advised at Fort Bliss tonight that ten troops of the Sixteenth cavalry under the command of Col. Herbert J. Slocum are in close pursuit of Villa southeast of Satevo, their exact location being unknown.

JUAREZ BECOMING HOSTILE.

The delicate situation of Carranza was emphasized tonight by Consul Garcia's reassertion that the American forces have accomplished the dispersion of the Villistas and should immediately withdraw from Mexico. Juarez is daily becoming more hostile toward American visitors.

Carranza sentries are surly, where formerly they were friendly.

The trouble is not with the Carranza government, a high authority stated tonight. The friction between Carranza and his military commanders is the chief element of danger feared, he said. War Minister Obregon is mentioned as the leader of the faction opposed to aiding the United States forces by unrestricted use of the Mexican railways and unstinted cooperation from the Carranza troops in Chihuahua.

Mexicans Mass on Border.

Reports continue to come from a dozen different sources of the concentration of Carranza troops near the border. These reports come in such a manner that they cannot be ignored, and it is known that they have been forwarded to Washington as credible.

A statement from Mexican sources today declared positively that Gen. Gavira, commandant at Juarez, had received orders to proceed to Casas Grandes to take a field command.

A train which arrived here today from Chihuahua City with several Americans, including two women, brought a story of the burning of the $1,000,000 plant of the Durango Lumber company, an American concern near Durango City. The plant was said to have been destroyed by Villistas.

Kill Eighteen More Mexicans.

Columbus, N. M., April 8.—Eighteen Villistas were killed in a battle with cavalry troops of the Thirteenth United States cavalry under Maj. Frank Tompkins, who overtook Villa's rear guard southeast of Satevo on Thursday, according to an unconfirmed report brought here this evening by a civilian returning from the interior of Mexico.

No Americans were killed or wounded in the engagement, according to the report.

Military officials expressed the belief that this may be a repetition of the story of Col. W. C. Brown's victory over the Villistas at Aguascalientes a week ago.

Revised figures now place the number of bandits killed by Brown's colored troopers at eighteen.

Americans Dig Selves In.

United States troops are intrenched in Mexico today.

Official confirmation has been obtained of reports that infantry at Boca Grande and other points along the American expedition's line of communication has dug intrenchments.

Extensive defensive works have been thrown up around the temporary supply bases at Casas Grandes and points further south.

VILLA SLAIN, REPORT.

BY FLOYD P. GIBBONS.

[War Correspondent of The Tribune.]

WITH GEN. PERSHING AT THE FRONT, April 7, via radio to Columbus, N. M., April 8.—Vaqueros report there is a Mexican corpse in a ranch house thirty miles from here and that it resembles Pancho Villa. Gen. Pershing believes the informers are mistaken but is investigating.

More reliable information from the advance troops now 500 miles south of the border has Villa on a litter half aday's march south of them. Villa, before fleeing Guerrero, forced American Dr. Estalle to dress his leg wound.

One of the aviators after a daring flight over hostile country located the advance force and has received Gen. Pershing's praise.

Tells of Outlaws' Rout.

In the Aguascalientes battle on April 1, Col. Brown's colored troops charged the Villistas encamped among the rocks, routed the outlaws, and after a pursuit of five miles, during which the bandits were scattered, a machine gun and equipment were captured. There were no American casualties.

Our outposts at Namiquipa captured an armed Villista riding a cavalry horse stolen during the Columbus raid. They also recovered loot—hats and clothing—from him bearing the American trade mark.

The Carranza man in charge at Namiquipa, after preventing the sale of supplies to the troops, changed his mind under persuasion and the food shortage was overcome.

Move Farther South.

Gen. Pershing personally is directing a comprehensive movement farthest south and I am accompanying him. Censorship naturally will be rigid until the materialization of the present plans.

April 5 was the day the aviator who received Gen. Pershing's praise located the American troops farthest south. They were at a point more than 100 miles from here. The column from that point was following Villa and his band, whose destination is unknown.

PUNCTURES TALL TALES OF VILLA'S ROMANTIC LIFE

Ex-Employer Says Many of the Bandit's Stirring Escapades Are Pure Invention.

Austin, Tex. April 8.—[Special.]—W. E. Brady of Austin knows more about the life of Francisco Villa in the days before this now notorious Mexican became a bandit and revolutionist than any other American.

Mr. Brady spent many years in the mountains in a remote part of the state of Durango, where he operated La Trinidad mine, situated in the San Dimas district.

For two years Mr. Brady had intimate business dealings with Villa. More pure fiction has probably been written about the life of Villa than of any man of modern times, according to Brady.

Commonplace incidents of his career have been magnified and added to until they are now quite generally accepted as having actually occurred. Many of his alleged stirring escapades are pure inventions.

Mr. Brady says Villa was much above the ordinary Mexican of the peon class before he entered upon his wild orgies as a brigand and revolutionist.

"Villa was in charge of the conducta or pack-mule train that carried the copper matte from my smelter and mine in the San Dimas district to Santiago, the shipping point on the Tepehuanes branch of the National Railways of Mexico," Mr. Brady said.

Knew Him Intimately.

"He held this position for two years, and on his frequent visits to La Trinidad I came to know him intimately.

"When Villa made his first appearance in camp I was impressed with the wonderful way in which he managed his men. He seemed to be specially fitted for commanding Mexicans. He enforced discipline among them, permitted no loitering or drinking, and moved the mule train on almost schedule precision.

"The story that has often been published that Villa learned to write his name while in prison in the City of Mexico cannot be true, for the reason that he always signed the 'facturas' for the shipments at the mine. While it was a somewhat laborious process for him to make his signature, still he could write it in fairly legible hand.

Brave? Sometimes Not.

"That Villa possesses bravery and daring has been proved beyond question during the last few years, but he was the chief figure in an incident that occurred at La Trinidad which showed that it depends somewhat on circumstance as to whether he resents being cuffed about.

"On the occasion in question the mule train had been loaded and started off along the trail when Villa entered the office to sign the 'facturas.' My son was in charge of the office, and Villa demanded of him that the price for freighting the matte be raised from $25 to $40 per ton.

"'Our contract is for $35 per ton and that is all we will pay,' my son replied.

"'But did you not pay another freighter $40 a ton to take out some the other day?' insisted Villa.

"It was true that in an emergency we hired a small mule train at that price to carry matte to Santiago, but it was no reason why we should have the price stipulated in our contract raised on us.

Youth Throws Him Out.

"To understand what happened next, it might be well for me to explain that we kept a table just inside the office door where we required all Mexicans to place their knives and guns before entering.

"Villa had laid his weapons and hat upon the table and was out of reach of them when my son turned upon him and literally threw him out of the office because he had continued to demand that the price for freighting the matte be raised to $40 per ton. I was standing outside when I saw the bulky form of Villa come flying through the door, and following him came his pistol, knife, and hat.

"'What is all this about?' I asked.

"My son explained matters, and said that Villa had refused to freight the matte unless the price was raised. With every evidence of perfect meekness, Villa then begged our pardon for seeking to obtain a higher price than the contract called for. He signed the 'facturas' and went away with the loaded mule train. In the many visits that he made to La Trinidad after that he never gave any sign of resentment for the way he had been treated."

Belgian Ruler's Birthday Observed in London and Paris, but Not at Home.

LONDON, April 8.—The forty-first birthday of King Albert of Belgium was observed both in London and Paris today with entertainments, the proceeds of which went to the Belgian relief fund. Dispatches from Amsterdam said the German military authorities in Belgium had issued strict orders against any public observances.

MEXICAN PLOT AT EL PASO AN ACT FOR INTERVENTION.

Five Men Said to Have Planned Wholesale Slaughter to Bring War by U. S.

El Paso, Tex., April 8.—An official of the Mexican de facto government said today five men, now prisoners in Juarez, are being held as the local leaders of the plot to capture that town, while the instigator of the whole affair is a wealthy Mexican, now a refugee in Texas. The rest of the prisoners, he said, were merely tools. The five leaders have confessed in the hope of leniency.

The plot, according to these confessions, was aimed at Americans. During the band concert in the plaza last Sunday evening the conspirators intended to open fire on all Americans in sight and immediately rush the barracks and seize the arms. They were then to attack the American patrol at the International bridge and other points.

Their object was said to be not so much to overthrow the Carrancistas as to force American intervention, which the conspirators believed would end the Carranza regime and restore peace with guarantees of security of property, including great estates now confiscated.

SMASH BANDITS, SAYS BAKER; GET VILLA—WILSON

Original Order and President's Edict Differ on Object of Invasion—Troops Stay?

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., April 8.—[Special.]—Secretary of War Baker today denied flatly that any intimation has been given to Maj. Gen. Funston that the Mexican expedition is to end in the near future as a result of Carranza demands that the American troops be withdrawn.

"I tell you there has been no change in the orders," he said with some heat when his attention was called to serious reports on this subject. "The object of the expedition was stated when it was undertaken. It never has been changed and the expedition is busily pursuing it now, with what I hope is a fair chance of early success."

Text of Original Order.

The original order follows:

"Washington, March 10, 1916—Commanding General, Southern Department, Fort Sam Houston, Tex.: You will promptly organize an adequate force of troops under the command of Brig. Gen. John J. Pershing, and will direct him to proceed promptly across the border in pursuit of the Mexican band which attacked the town of Columbus, N. M., and the troops there on the morning of the 9th inst. These troops will be withdrawn to American territory as soon as the de facto government of Mexico is able to relieve them of this work. In any event, the work of these troops will be regarded as finished as soon as Villa's band or bands are known to be broken up.

"In carrying out these instructions you are authorized to employ whatever guides or interpreters are necessary, and you are given general authority to employ such transportation, including motor transportation with necessary civilian personnel, as may be required. . . .

"You are instructed to make all practicable use of the aeroplanes at San Antonio for observation. Telegraph for whatever reinforcements or material you need. Notify this office as to force selected and expedite movement."

Capture Villa, Wilson Aim.

The president's statement when the troops were ordered into Mexico was as follows:

"An adequate force will be sent at once in pursuit of Villa, with the single object of capturing him and putting a stop to his forays.

"This can and will be done in entirely friendly aid of the constituted authorities in Mexico, and with scrupulous respect for the sovereignty of that republic."

It will be noted that the president in his statement leaves no doubt that he intends to capture Villa. The departmental order does not require this capture. The order has never before been made public.

Gives In to Carranza.

Secretary Lansing, it became known today, has sent a modified protocol to Carranza. This latest communication agrees to the Carranza suggestions for a limitation of field operations for the American punitive expedition. It does not accept suggestions for a limit of time and the number of troops.

Carranza based his terms on conditions existing at the time of the Indian raids, when it was possible to limit operations of troops because the Indians had well defined and relatively smaller areas from which to draw reinforcements and supplies.

The state department, however, is understood to have taken the position that the present circumstances are entirely different, and that such limitations as Carranza proposed would hamper the American troops.

WORK OUT CITY DEFENSE PLAN

Foreman's Officers Study Problem of Halting Foe at South Chicago.

FIFTY IN FIELD CAMP.

The First cavalry, Illinois national guard, is fighting an imaginary battle today to save South Chicago with its steel plants and munition factories. On the Calumet river also is shipping and near by huge grain elevators.

More than fifty officers of the First cavalry are working out a tactical problem. That problem is: How shall they hold off, until arrives aid, a hostile army intent on grasping the steel and munition plants, the shipping, the grain elevators?

The officers rode sixteen miles yesterday from their armory at North Clark and Goethe streets to the camp spot. They began the ride at 1:50 o'clock and arrived in the camp at 4:55, thus making a time of more than five miles an hour.

Compared to Dodd's Ride.

The time made by Col. Dodd in his hard ride after Villa just before the battle in which thirty or more Villistas were killed was three and one-quarter miles an hour. Col. Dodd, however, had to ride fifty-five miles, and it was not over pavement.

The officers have only today to work out their problem. They are the Blues. They must check, beat back for a short time, the invading Reds.

The work of checking the theoretical invasion is done thus: It is figured that the invasion can be stopped if certain opposing measures can be put through, if certain rides from one point to another can be made in a certain time, if subordinate officers make swift analyses and make right decisions at right times.

Praise for Col. Foreman.

Maj. M. M. McNamee of the United States cavalry, assigned to instruct cavalry of the national guard, presented to Col. Milton J. Foreman this letter:

"Maj. M. M. McNamee, United States Cavalry.—My Dear Maj. McNamee: The chief of the division of militia affairs directs me to express to you and through you to the commanding officer, First cavalry, Illinois National guard, his satisfaction and pleasure in noting the progress made during the first year by the regiment in numerical strength and in general officering. Very truly yours,

"S. R. GREAVES,

"Captain of Cavalry, Office Chief of Staff, Division of Militia Affairs, War Department."

The letter was read by Col. Foreman to the officers just before they sat down to mess last night, and they all cheered.

Maj. McNamee and Col. Foreman will be the judges of the answers turned in this evening by the officers.

Lt. Col. Wallace H. Whigham will command the first squadron, composed, in theory, of Troops A, B, C, and D; Capt. Walter J. Fisher, senior captain of the cavalry, will command the second squadron, comprising Troops E, F, G, and H, and Capt. Joseph W. Mattes will have charge of the third squadron, Troops I, K, L, and M.

HARDING SOUNDS UNION NOTE FOR G.O.P. AND MOOSE

Old Mistakes to Be Corrected, "Keynoter" Tells Hamilton Club.

Republican-Progressive peace was proffered last night by United States Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio, the Republican national subcommittee's choice for temporary chairman of the Coliseum convention, at the Appomattox day celebration of the Hamilton club at Hotel La Salle.

Senator Harding's preliminary remarks were held to be of the utmost national significance by the thoroughly posted Republicans who were at the dinner.

"I have no excuse to make for my position in 1912," Senator Harding said, "but we are headed to a correction of the mistakes that were made. The great majority of the voters of the United States are ready to join in a triumphant Republican restoration."

Union Sentiment Cheered.

This sentiment got a big cheer. At the tables were many Illinois and Chicago men who were at sword points in 1912 in the alignment as between the Republicans and the Progressives.

"We are ready to touch elbows and to make amends for the failure of 1912," Senator Harding continued. "The American nation, distracted by four years of Democratic misrule, misrepresentation at home and abroad, and misgovernment in Washington, and in the temporarily Democratic states of the north, is now ready for a period of forgetting that can be brought about only by a Republican victory in November.

Must Be United to Win.

"As for myself," Senator Harding said, "I am confident in the assertion that no step can be undertaken, no policy can be furthered, no move can be made that does not arise from a hopeful determination to have all Republicans together upon a single platform and bravely and confidently supporting a single candidate."

This was Senator Harding's preface to a notable address that, he said earlier in the day, had been prepared before he knew that he was to be the subcommittee's selection for temporary chairman. He made a tremendous hit with what he did say.

Senator Sherman Speaks.

Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman followed Senator Harding. Senator Sherman's address closely followed public statements that he has made in speeches in the state and at Washington.

Former Senator E. J. Burkett of Nebraska, an announced candidate for the vice presidential nomination, spoke in place of Senator William E. Borah of Idaho. Robert S. Iles, president of the Hamilton club, was the toastmaster.

At the tables were many members of the subcommittee on arrangements of the Republican national committee, leaders of all Republican elements in Illinois and more than 500 members of the Hamilton club.

The Senator's Speech.

Senator Harding's speech in part follows:

"Tonight, two months before it reconsecrates itself to the nation's service and names its standard bearer, the people of the United States are ready and eager to acclaim the Republican party returned. The tide is swelling and irresistible. The unerring trend of popular sentiment is felt wherever two or more American citizens are gathered together, and popular intent is magnified by patriotic desire.

"The political situation is unmatched in all our history. There is as marked a desire for a Republican restoration for our industrial sake as when the American people turned hopefully to William McKinley in 1896, and there is an anxiety for our nationality not unlike that which sought out Abraham Lincoln in 1860.

Backs Protective Tariff.

"We want the reestablishment of that dependable industrial good fortune which must underlie all our ideals and aspirations, and we want the resurrection of that exalted American spirit and its reflected Americanism which makes for self-respect at home and wholesome respect abroad.

"A good many people thought they saw the end of the Republican party in 1912, but when sober reflection came, when the effects of defeat were measured in the country's misfortune, we saw a needless disagreement over methods of procedure—which deserved correction, let it be said—we saw we had wasted perfectly good Republican energy in smashing a precedent which might have been flung aside with one sweep of a sober hand, and concord was rended in the smashing.

"But regard for Republican policy was never surrendered by the majority of the American people, and when the vision cleared there looped the monuments of Republican constructiveness, there stood the foundations on which to rebuild, and the great American majority is eager and ready tonight for the triumphant restoration.

Welcomes United Action.

"It is useless to talk of 1912. I had rather regret the unhappiness and its attending defeats and turn to invite all who believe in Republican principles to touch elbows again and move on to the triumphant national return which has already been hailed so gladly in so many states.

"Let me change the expression and say I had rather forget for the next four years, and let a nation wearied anew by the Democratic party join us in four years of happy forgetting.

"It seems characteristic of our American life that we must have periodical Democratic disaster to bring us to appreciation of the healthful glow of Republican activity.

"There would be worse depression in the land today than in the early '90s if the European war had not saved us from the blight of Wilsonian Democracy. We have the burden of a war emergency tax when imports exceed those of the corresponding months of peace and our exports far surpass all previous figures because of our enormous war shipments to Europe.

The Cost of Living.

"All that the Wilson administration has said concerning its economic policy is disproven by the facts and is challenged by the change of attitude on sugar and the tariff commission.

"A party committed to a tariff for revenue only has again proven a party deficient in revenue always.

"The tariff commission plan is a professed conversion, not to magnify the series of succeeding changes, but to hide the tariff blunder of 1913.

"I do not mean to oppose the tariff commission idea. We Republicans inaugurated it under Mr. Taft and Democracy kicked it aside to cheapen the cost of living. The accomplishment, before or since the European war, is too ridiculous to discuss.

"Democracy reduced the capacity to live and left the cost mounting higher.

Democrats Bring Disaster.

"Production, protected production, made us what we are, and planted the banners of prosperity from coast to mountain ranges and glorified the valleys and plains which intervene.

"I have no objection to a tariff commission, but I want it a protectionist commission. I want a commission which believes that the policy which made us industrially eminent is essential to maintain that eminence.

"Until there is readjustment of the world's wage scale we require the protection which made our industries to preserve and extend them, and I would rather see this great people lift the pay of the earth's toilers to the scale we boast than lower ours to their low standards and cheaper production.

"I have alluded to the protective policy at this length, Mr. Toastmaster, because it is certain to be the great issue of the coming campaign. There will be more spectacular issues, there will be the patriotic appeal for preparedness, with Republican committal to an adequate program for national defense.

"And it will be no new declaration for the Republican party. But the protective policy is inseparable from any preparedness discussion. Aside from the self-dependence in production, which is a nation's first reliance, it affords the means of providing an army and navy without the burden of direct and odious taxation.

"I like the thought of making our foreign competitor pay this cost of guarding us against his possible trespass of our national rights.

For Adequate Preparedness.

"We believe in preparedness, not hysterical but determined; not political in intent but patriotic in its sufficiency.

"We believe in a navy, as we always have, commensurate with our importance and extended coasts to defend.

"We believe in an army ample to make for tranquility and security and give our voice for humanity and justice the volume of a strong as well as righteous nation, loving peace but unafraid to contend for the right.

"We believe—nay, we know—that under Republican policies such preparedness is wholly possible without an added burden of taxation, and we shall foster the American spirit which is the guaranty against militarism or the rule of might.

"I want to stand by the president, but I want him to stand by my country. It is good to keep out of war, but not at the sacrifice of all American rights.

Our European Relations.

"In our relations with Europe there will be differences of opinion as to what ought to have been and what ought to be our course. We ought not to listen to cowardly persons who are so awed by the magnitude of the conflict that they are unmindful of our just rights. Nor ought we be led by the rash enthusiasts who think it our function to sober a continent which has become war crazed.

"The great American heart is generally right. We have been cultivating the spirit of fairness and justice from the immortal beginning and the great conscience of our people is seldom, if ever, wrong. It has seemed to me we ought to see in the light of spirit and conscience the wise course and steer straight ahead, unafraid, declaring our rights and our purpose to defend them."

A Reminder of Peace.

In times of peace much of the light Maryland tobacco was exported to mix with the heavy German leaf.

SUFFRAGE CAR DUE IN CHICAGO TOMORROW P. M.

Woman Spellbinders Who Will Tour the West Make First Stop In This City.

(BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.)

Washington, D. C., April 8.—[Special.]—All aboard for the suffrage special!

Determined to secure action on the Susan B. Anthony amendment, twenty-five women appointed by the Congressional Union, for Woman Suffrage, will leave Washington tomorrow night for a six weeks' campaign trip through the equal suffrage states, to line up the women voters for a final "drive" on congress.

The swing through the west will be made on a special car chartered by the Congressional union, and the party will include the most prominent suffrage workers of the eastern states. The rallying cry of the suffragists, like that of the Three Musketeers, is "one for all and all for one," for national woman suffrage.

The plan of campaign and the circumstances leading up to its adoption were discussed this afternoon at the conference of members of the advisory council and state national officers of the union at Cameron house, the national headquarters.

Those in the Party.

Resolutions voicing the appeal of the eastern to the western women were presented and approved, and the election of delegates formally confirmed.

The party will be led by Miss Lucy Burns, and will include Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, daughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton; Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont Mrs Inez Milholland Boissevain, Mrs. John Rogers, Miss Anna Constable, and Miss Helen Todd of New York, Mrs. Robert Baker of Washington, D. C., who will serve as "war correspondent" during the western campaign; Mrs. W. D. Ascough of Connecticut, Mrs. Mina Van Winkle of New Jersey, Mrs. Townsend Scott of Maryland, Mrs. Cyrus Mead and Miss Edith Goode of Ohio, and Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles of Delaware, daughter of a former secretary of state and our first ambassador to Great Britain.

Nearly every woman in the party is a seasoned campaigner and at massmeetings now being organized along the route of the suffrage special and from the rear platform whenever a five minute stop can be made they will tell of the difficulties with which eastern women are confronted.

First Move of Its Kind.

It will be the first time that the record of a party has been carried by women to women on the eve of a presidential election, with the appeal that they organize to demand immediate action at Washington, and prepare themselves, if congress refuses to act, to throw their votes at the next election in the way that will most help the suffrage cause.

"Thus," Miss Burns points out, "the suffrage lobby at Washington will be backed by the one unanswerable appeal that can be made to the dominant party—that is, by the proof that enough women are already pledged to put suffrage above all other issues in the next election to make it unwise for the party in power longer to oppose this particular measure."

The advance upon the west is timed with deadly precision. The first meeting will be held in Chicago Monday afternoon.

MEDILL M'CORMICK CHARGES TAMMANY HOPE TO MAYOR.

Points Out That Criticism of Thompson Comes from Others than His Political Enemies.

In the windup last night of the campaign of Medill McCormick for state committeeman in the Ninth congressional district, and Oscar Hebel for ward committeeman of the Twenty-first ward, Mr. McCormick accused Mayor Thompson of attempting to organize a Chicago Tammany Hall, with Fred Lundin at the head of it. The meeting was held in the North Side Turner hall.

"The mayor has said that the opposition to him is factional," said Mr. McCormick, "and that it comes only from his political enemies. If that were true it might be considered insincere criticism. But the first outburst came from the Civil Service Reform association.

"Even those devoted women who make up the Visiting Nurse association felt called upon for the first time in their history to engage in a public controversy and point out the havoc wrought by the mayor's civil service commission at the Municipal Tuberculosis sanitarium. The death of Theodore Sachs aroused the people of Chicago to a realization of the selfish maladministration of the city hall."

Among other speakers were Emil Wetten, Mrs. James W. Morrisson, Fletcher Dobyns, and William J. Calhoun.

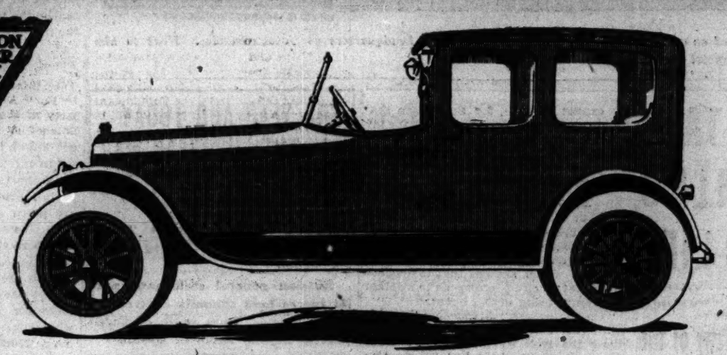
HUDSON SUPER SIX



Hudson Super-Six as a Town Car—$2500 at Detroit

An Exclusive Model

Only 300 Made for All America

The Hudson Super-Six will have an output of 30,000 cars for this season. That's the largest output for a quality car in the world.

But only 300 will be built with this Town Car body. That's one for each four Hudson dealers.

So this stunning model—the handsomest Town Car you ever saw—will not be a common sight. Not one will be left, in all probability, in 30 days from now.

This Town Car is their latest production. It forms their supreme effort in beauty and luxury. It is proof of the fact that the finest of fine cars, with the limit in elegance, can be sold for $2500.

BUILT BY MASTERS

Master craftsmen of international fame were employed in the building of this body. For sixty years they have held the top place among coach builders.

When motor cars came, foreign makers employed them to build bodies for their costliest cars. Also some first-class American makers.

So for 15 years a very large percentage of the finest cars sold in this country have been equipped by these artists in bodies. The prices have run as high as $10,000.

SIX LUXURY MODELS

The Super-Six motor is a Hudson invention, controlled by Hudson patents. It is 80 per cent more efficient than former types. From a small, light Six it develops 76 horsepower, solely by eliminating friction.

This motor makes Hudson cars supreme. No other car of any type can match the Super-Six performance.

For this great motor six styles of bodies have been built, each an exquisite model. They will all delight you. Come and learn more about them while you can have your choice.

HOYNE WARNS VOTERS TO KEEP IN OWN PRIMARY

Citizens' Association and the Burns-Sleuths to Watch for Violation of 2 Year Law.

Contemplated fraud, charged by the Republicans in nearly every ward in Chicago, is the closing chorus of the fighting politicians, Republican and Democratic, who will try to settle their differences at the Illinois presidential primaries on Tuesday.

State's Attorney Hoyne jumped into the situation in the afternoon with a warning that any violations of the primary law would be prosecuted. He particularly warned against persons voting in primaries other than those in which they have voted within two years.

No issue arises except the single question of which faction shall control each of the two big parties. It is a showdown, for the first time in Democratic party history, between Roger C. Sullivan and Carter H. Harrison, where the former national committeeman and the former mayor are candidates against each other. The Republican row is a three cornered one between Mayor Thompson and his political manager, Fred Lundin, in one corner; Charles S. Deneen and Roy O. West, in another, and Edward J. Brundage and Homer K. Galpin and the so-called "neutrals" in the third.

No public official is to be nominated. Delegates to the Chicago and St. Louis national conventions will be elected. The Republican and Democratic state committees will be chosen directly, and as an entirely new feature of Chicago local politics one ward committeeman will be elected by direct vote by each party.

Each committeeman's voting strength in the county committee is based upon the proportion of the ward's party vote, as cast at the presidential election, to the total vote in the city.

Incident to this Chicago mess is the effort of John Maynard Harlan to break into the Illinois Big Eight to the Chicago convention as a "no preference" candidate, but openly for the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt. The Republican national delegates elected will select a national committeeman from Illinois when the delegation caucuses in June.

Thompson vs. West.

For this place Mayor William Hale Thompson and National Committeeman Roy O. West are avowed candidates. The result is that the Deneen faction would eliminate Thompson and the city hall crowd would crucify West.

The Thompson-Lundin faction puts out the claim that there has been a distinct election favorable to the city hall since the aldermanic elections of last Tuesday; that the majority of the city hall candidates will be elected to the county committee, and that Mayor Thompson will beat West.

His prophecy is ridiculed in both the Deneen and the neutral camps. Circumstances are such that neither one will forecast a working majority for itself in the county committee, but each claims that the mayor and Lundin have not the slightest chance to get in sight of a county committee majority.

The Sullivan Democrats expect to retain National Committeeman Charles Boeschenstein at St. Louis next June. Against Sullivan is combined the strength of Senator Lewis, Gov. Dunne, and former Mayor Harrison, with all the available federal and state patronage, and the part of the county building patronage controlled by the anti-Sullivan county organization of which Congressman A. J. Sabath is the chairman.

Chief effort of the Sullivan managers is now directed against Sabath in the Eleventh ward and Frank Paschen in the Twenty-eighth for ward committeemen. Mr. Paschen is one of the four candidates for Postmaster whose names are now before President Wilson.

Claims Thirty Wards.

Thomas J. Webb, chairman of the Sullivan campaign committee, said last night that the Sullivan forces are sure to win thirty wards, that four are doubtful, including the Seventh, in which Edward F. Brennan, Gov. Dunne's public administrator, is the anti-Sullivan candidate, and only one ward is conceded to the opposition.

The anti-Sullivan headquarters at the Hotel Morrison asserted that the opposition to Sullivan will retain its present majority in the regular county committee; that its candidates for delegates at large will sweep the state, and that Boeschenstein will be defeated.

The estimated total vote will be 275,000, Chief Clerk Egan figures at the election offices. He thinks the Democrats will poll 160,000 votes and the Republicans about 115,000. The total registration in Chicago is about 750,000. Women have the right to vote for presidential preference and for nothing else. Lawrence Y. Sherman is the only candidate on the Republican ticket and Woodrow Wilson is the only candidate on the Democratic.

Fifty thousand commissions to watchers had been issued by the board of election commissioners up to 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Nothing like this ever has been heard of in Chicago. The frenzied politicians became frightened at each other. Accusations shot out from rival headquarters, and then State's Attorney Hoyne stepped in.

Hoyne's Statement.

Everybody is convinced that the politicians will not overlook anything in getting results on Tuesday. This is what seems to have aroused State's Attorney Hoyne. This is his statement:

"I call attention of the voters of the various parties who will participate in the primary election to the following:

"Under the primary election law it is perjury for any persons whose vote is challenged or any witness sworn under the provisions of the act, who knowingly and willfully and corruptly swears falsely to any fact necessary to qualify him as a voter.

"The punishment for perjury is one to fourteen years in the penitentiary. It is conspiracy punishable by a term not exceeding five years in the penitentiary, or a $2,000 fine, or both, for two or more persons to conspire and agree to do any of the following acts, each or which in themselves is a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or $1,000 fine, or both:

"1. To vote more than once.

"2. To vote knowing that the voter is not a qualified elector.

"3. To vote at the primary of a political party other than his own within two years.

"4. To, by any unlawful means, prevent or attempt to prevent any primary elector from attending or voting.

"5. To give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any judge or clerk of election as a consideration of some act to be done or omitted to be done contrary to his official duties.

Provision on Bribery.

"6. For a judge or a clerk to receive request or demand any bribe or reward in consideration of some act to be done or omitted to be done, contrary to his official duty.

"7. For a judge to permit a person to vote whose vote is challenged.

"8. For a judge to knowingly permit a person to vote who is not a qualified voter.

"9. For a judge to knowingly receive and count more than one vote from the same person for the same office.

"10. For a judge to refuse to receive the vote of a qualified elector.

"11. For a judge or a clerk to willfully neglect to perform any of the duties required by law to be done by him.

"Officials or other individuals violating the above provisions of the law will be sternly prosecuted."

"I have received a number of complaints, if they are with foundation I don't know, that attempts are going to be made by Democrats not qualified to vote the Republican ticket to vote the latter ticket, and vice versa," Mr. Hoyne said. "On the day of election I will have men from my own office in the wards where these complaints came."

Citizens' Association Acts.

The Citizens' association went into action with a notice of a reward of $100 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any election official or other person for violation of the election laws anywhere in Chicago.

Secretary Shelby M. Singleton of the Citizens' association sent out a letter in which he said:

"A number of automobiles, manned by men from the state's attorney's office and the Burns' Detective agency, will be kept circulating in the Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-second, Twenty-third, Thirty-first, Thirty-second, and Thirty-third wards. It is the purpose of the Citizens' association to endeavor by the use of the Burns' Detective agency and by all other means in its power to prevent illegal voting and other violations of the election law at the primary on April 11."

UPSET RESULTS IN WISCONSIN

Final Figures Show La Follette Has Majority of Delegates.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 8.—One of the biggest surprises in the political history of Wisconsin was sprung tonight when the final figures in the vote for candidates for delegates to the Republican national convention were totaled and showed that Robert M. La Follette, heretofore considered beaten, would control the Wisconsin delegation by two votes. The delegation will stand: Progressives, 14; conservatives, 12.

The returns from the first until today gave Philipp and his delegates a majority of anywhere from 4 to 14. The returns from Tuesday night until late today gave Philipp and the conservative Republicans a lead which it was believed could not be overcome.

The conservatives carried the industrial centers outside of Milwaukee, such as Beloit and Janesville, considered strong La Follette territory previously. The governor and his candidates were believed to have a big majority in the outlying counties from strength shown there in previous elections.

La Follette will have three delegates at large. Philipp received the highest number of votes of the candidates for delegates at large, 69,161.

FUGITIVE GIRL ARRESTED.

Jessie Robertson, Who Fled from Juvenile Court Home, Nabbed in Cincinnati.

Police of the detective bureau received word last night from Cincinnati that Jessie Robertson, 17 years old, 1246 West Congress street, a ward of the Juvenile court, who escaped from the Chicago Home for Girls, has been arrested.

SERGEL FINDS T. R. FAVORITE IN SOUTH END

Second Congressional District Poll Reveals Roosevelt in Big Lead for Nominee.

Charles H. Sergel, city treasurer, who is a candidate for delegate from the Second congressional district to the Republican national convention, has undertaken a postal card referendum on the preferences of voters in the district for Republican presidential candidate.

Mr. Sergel reports a total of 620 responses, with the following result:

ROOSEVELT—First choice, 430; second choice, 250; third choice, 223.

HUGHES—First choice, 80; second choice, 150; third choice, 89.

SHERMAN—First choice, 47; second choice, 60; third choice, 84.

ROOT—First choice, 12; second choice, 33; third choice, 55.

CUMMINS—First choice, 11; second choice, 18; third choice, 22.

LA FOLLETTE—First choice, 9; second choice, 33; third choice, 20.

BORAH—First choice, 2; second choice, 14; third choice, 32.

FAIRBANKS—First choice, 4; second choice, 7; third choice, 16.

MANN—First choice, 4; second choice, 2; third choice, 1.

BURTON—First choice, 4; second choice, 16; third choice, 25.

In addition Col Goethals received one vote, Senator Weeks one as first choice and eight as second; ex-Senator Beveridge, one vote as first choice, and Gen. Leonard Wood one vote as a third choice.

For "America First."

Mr. Sergel is an unpledged candidate for delegate and his platform, among other things, says:

"For 'America first,' the Republican party must win the presidential election. Only a reunited party can win. Conservatives and progressives will unite behind men like Roosevelt and Hughes, who typify the wise, aggressive leadership which the Republican party has given so often to the nation in times of stress and strain."

HORSE HURTS 2 POLICEMEN.

Crowd Waiting for Street Car Is Saved from Injury by Patrolman.

Policeman Bernard Devine of the Chicago avenue station at the risk of his life stopped a runaway horse at Grand avenue and Rush street yesterday as it was about to dash into a group of twenty people waiting for a car. He was dragged a short distance and suffered a number of bruises and cuts. The horse became frightened and ran away from in front of a saloon at La Salle street and Grand avenue. Policeman Ortomb Gilbert was also injured in an effort to catch the horse.

HARLAN APPEALS TO VOTE FOR HIM ONLY AT PRIMARY.

Roosevelt Partisan Tells Illinois Voters That Is the Sole Way to Register Preference for T. R.

John Maynard Harlan, candidate for delegate at large to the Republican national convention, issued a statement last night in closing his campaign in which he advocated the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for president. He repeats his stump arguments and concludes:

"Illinoisans, you whose history causes you to thrill with pride when you read of Lincoln, Grant, and Logan, won't you go to the polls next Tuesday, April 11, and vote for Harlan and Harlan alone?

"I need a few of you loyal men to do volunteer work next Tuesday. Without political workers, wholly unaided by party organization, I must go it alone on Tuesday unless volunteers step forward and say 'I'm ready.'

"How many will do that? Will you watch at the precinct polling places on Tuesday? Will you agree to wear Roosevelt badges? Will you help our call, 'The nation needs Roosevelt; let's draft him.'"

JUSTICE HUGHES OR THE COLONEL, PRESENT LINEUP

Friends Say Supreme Court Judge Is for Preparedness; Views on Other Issues.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—[Special.]—What are the views of Associate Justice Hughes of the Supreme court on the issues of the hour?

As the continued silence of the justice on his nomination for the presidency increases the probability that his name will be balloted upon in the Chicago convention two months hence, this has become the paramount question in Republican politics. So important is the question of the jurist's opinions on current problems of governmental policy becoming that his silence on this score alone bids fair to be a powerful element in the determination of his availability for the leadership of the party.

HUGHES OR ROOSEVELT.

The developments of the last week have made the situation in the Republican party on the eve of the presidential campaign all the more anomalous. Hughes and Roosevelt stand out more conspicuously than ever as the great men of the party between whom the convention naturally would make choice of a leader.

Roosevelt is a man whose views upon every conceivable subject, including the pending questions of great moment, are known in the fullest detail to the American people. Is Roosevelt be nominated by the convention, it will be with the full knowledge by the party of opinions he holds on foreign and domestic policies of government.

NOT KNOWN TO PUBLIC.

Hughes is a man whose views of almost all of the public questions which have been brought to the fore in the last six years are utterly unknown. Unless Hughes should break his silence before the convention the party could nominate him only in the faith that in view of his record as a Republican his attitude on the issues confronting the nation would prove acceptable.

So far Mr. Hughes has declined to authorise any statement setting forth the opinions he holds on the problems of the hour. His friends say that he could not assent to an authoritative exposition of his attitude without confessing that he regards his nomination a possibility.

GET HUGHES SENTIMENTS.

Republican politicians, however, have been busy gleaning from various sources scraps of information indicating "where Hughes stands" on the questions everybody is discussing nowadays. The justice has expressed his opinions to his intimates from time to time and what the Republican politicians have learned of his attitude may be set forth thus:

He favors the development of a navy of the strength and character recommended by the general board.

He favors doubling the size of the standing army; the development of a reserve, and the complete federalization of the national guard.

He believes in upholding the Monroe doctrine unequivocally and in preparing the nation to defend it at all hazards.

FOR PREPAREDNESS.

He believes that at the outbreak of the European war the nation should have been placed in a state of preparedness to defend its citizens and commerce from aggression by the belligerents.

He does not agree with Col. Roosevelt that the United States ought to have taken a hand in the European war over the question of the alleged violation of Belgian neutrality by Germany.

He believes that the Mexican question should have been met with firm insistence upon the protection of Americans and American property from harm and the employment of force, if necessary.

He is opposed to withdrawal from the Philippines until the people of the islands are fully prepared for self-government.

The attitude of the justice in regard to national defense today, it is stated, is exactly what it was when he uttered the following words:

"We are devoted to the interests of peace and we cherish no policy of aggression. The maintenance of our ideals is our surest protection. It is our constant aim to live in friendship with all nations and to realize the aims of a free government, secure from the interruptions of strife and the wastes of war. It is entirely consistent with these aims and it is our duty to make adequate provision for our defense and to maintain the efficiency of our army and navy. And this I favor."

Philippines and Tariff.

His view of the Philippine question he expressed thus:

"With regard to the Filipinos we are placed under the most sacred obligations. In justice to them and in justice to ourselves we must omit no effort to prepare them for self-government."

Justice Hughes is an exponent of a protective tariff and favors the creation of a tariff commission.

INDICTS FOUR CHICAGO MEN.

Cincinnati, O., April 8.—[Special.]—Indictments were returned here today against four Chicago men, Stephen M. Meyers, Frank Meyers, George L. Ames, and Charles Silk, on the charge of using the mails to defraud. The Ohio Retail Piano Dealers' association contends the picture grand prize advertising scheme used by the men indicted was fraudulent.

SENATOR WEEKS MAY GIVE WAY FOR ROOSEVELT

Campaign Manager of Massachusetts' Favorite Son Suggests Alliance.

BY PERRY ARNOLD.

[UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Oyster Bay, N. Y., April 8.—Senator John W. Weeks, Massachusetts Republican aspirant for presidential honors, may be ready to step aside in favor of Roosevelt. That was the construction placed by Roosevelt adherents tonight on the fact that Charles G. Washburn, generally known as Weeks' campaign manager, with George von L. Meyer, former secretary of the navy, and known heretofore as Weeks' booster, had a lengthy conference with Col. Roosevelt today. At its conclusion Meyer came out openly for Roosevelt as the Republican candidate.

Weeks' Intentions in Doubt.

"Is Senator Weeks preparing to withdraw in favor of Col. Roosevelt?" Washburn was asked.

"I have not been in Washington lately, and most of the news comes from there," the former Massachusetts representative countered.

"I have nothing to add to the Trinidad statement," the colonel stated.

With Weeks' aspirations for a Massachusetts delegation at Chicago next June seriously menaced by a recent statement from the four candidates for delegates at large announcing their support of Roosevelt, the meeting of the Weeks forces with the colonel took on the aspect of another "healing" movement between the Progressives and the Republicans.

Roosevelt Recalls Policies.

The colonel paused in his conference late today long enough to make answer to questions raised in several editorials regarding what position he would have taken if he were now president.

"It is impossible for me to answer hypothetical question in editorials," he said. "A correct judgment can be formed by taking what I actually did during the seven and a half years I was president. Let him turn to Mr. Washburn's recently published biography of me."

The passages cited by the colonel showed these cardinal beliefs:

"A wanton or useless war, or a war for mere aggression, is to be condemned as a peculiarly atrocious crime against humanity," from one of the colonel's speeches.

The Roosevelt message to congress of April 14, 1908, which demanded a four battleship program, and which contained the sentence: "I advocate that the United States build a navy commensurate with its powers and its needs, because I feel that such a navy will be the surest guarantee and safeguard of peace. It is idle to assume that a proud nation, jealous of its honor and conscious of its great mission in the world, can be content to rely for peace upon the forbearance of other powers. It will be equally foolish to rely upon each of them possessing at all times and under all circumstances

SENATOR SHERMAN OPPOSED TO WAR, HE TELLS GERMANS

Says Critics of His Course in Senate Are Themselves Shy on Neutrality They Preach.

United States Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman of Illinois said yesterday before the German club in the Hotel Sherman that persons who have criticized him for his voting in congress and his belief that this country should not be involved in war with Germany because a few Americans lose their lives on torpedoed steamers carrying ammunition to the allies, only proclaim their lack of neutrality, and that they would have him vote in favor of the allies. He asserted that he does not want this country involved in war with any nation.

"The greatest patriot of this country is the man of most markst neutrality," he said.

Of Mexican affairs the senator drew a comparison of the protection given Americans in that country when Porfirio Diaz was president and recent times when Americans have been warned to leave Mexico and take their valuables with them.

Senator Sherman called attention to the construction of the submarine and its steel shell vulnerable to guns of small caliber, and declared it "the cheapest kind of insurance" for boat owners to have Americans aboard their ships carrying war supplies to the allies. He said that of the fifteen directors of the White Star line, eleven are Americans and only four British, though their ships are registered in England.

"The White Star liner Adriatic was carrying ammunition to the allies and its destination was England when it was sunk by a submarine," Senator Sherman said. "But it is the cheapest kind of insurance for the boat owners for Americans to be aboard their ships carrying war supplies to the allies.

"There are fifteen members of the board of directors of the White Star line, and eleven are Americans and four British, but their ships are all under English registry, because of the more favorable marine laws.

"If I were to go out between the lines of men fighting in Flanders and, buttoning up my coat, would shout, 'I am an American. Stop fighting at once!' do you think that the generals would order their men to cease firing?"

BATTLES FOR THE PENNANT START ON WEDNESDAY

CUBS NOT QUITE READY, BUT OUTLOOK IS BRIGHT

LIKE STRANGERS IN LEAGUE.

How Cubs Will Line Up Against Reds in Opener.

Flack, rf.	Saier, 1b.	Archer, c.
Williams, cf.	Zwilling, lf.	Hendrix, p.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Memphis, Tenn., April 8.—[Special.]—After devoting five weeks to preparedness Chicago's new Cubs will go into battle Wednesday at Cincinnati, where they will open the 1916 war for the National league pennant. Before a gun has been fired it looks as if it will be one of the most exciting wars in the history of the great American game, and indications are that Chicago will be in the thick of the fight all the way.

The Chicago force under the command of Joe Tinker is like a stranger in the old league. Besides Tinker, there are several men on the club who wear the scars of other wars, and there also are recruits with the enthusiasm of youth, making altogether a great combination for a long siege.

Not Ready, Tinker Thinks.

Judging from the showing made in practice battles, the Cubs either are not great or else they are not ready. Manager Tinker thinks it is the latter condition. He is convinced that his squad is a fighting one and one possessing ability to stand up under the most strenuous firing. It certainly is a much better ball team than represented Chicago in the National league last year, and it shouldn't require a much greater team to accomplish stirring results.

So much building up and tearing down were necessary that even at this writing, four days before the opening, there is doubt as to the exact lineup of the Cubs for the first combat. A lack of speed has marked the Cubs since the first day they began training in the Florida camp. Two or three individuals possess it to a marked degree, but on the whole the Cubs of today are not fast.

Tinker needs more pepper around the middle bag in the defensive play; he needs more alertness in base running and better teamwork at all times.

Pitchers May Win Flag.

Whether these faults can be improved sufficiently to make the Cubs a pennant team remains to be seen. If they can't, there still is a chance to win if the pitching staff goes through in exceptional style. Natural baseball ability is present in abundance.

There are three of the Cubs' most sturdy pitchers ready to go to the slab against the Reds in the opening game. Perhaps Manager Tinker will not decide which one shall be chosen until ten minutes before the ball rings. Claude Hendrix, George McConnell, and Jim Vaughn, a trio whose combined weight would be about 575 pounds and whose combined length would be more than 18½ feet, are the ones who will warm up in front of the bench. It looks as if Hendrix is the most likely man to be picked, depending largely on the antics of his spitball on that particular day.

Eastern Teams Are Stronger.

In spite of the Cubs' tardiness in getting into playing form, there is a chance for them to hold their own with the strong teams of the league in the opening weeks of the race, because of the schedule. All the rules of dope indicate that the strength of the National league this season will lie in three of the eastern teams and only one of the western quartet.

For more than three weeks the eastern teams will be fighting each other, and consequently no one team of that section is likely to get a large majority of victories. Experts are picking Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Chicago as the strong clubs, with Brooklyn holding a possible chance. Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and Cincinnati are set down as the weak ones.

While Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Brooklyn will be fighting one another, there is the dope chance of Chicago's getting a flying start by cleaning up on Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Pittsburgh. Of course that is only a dope chance. So much of the unexpected can happen in baseball that one need not be surprised if St. Louis, or Pittsburgh, or Cincinnati is leading the league when May 10 arrives.

Cubs Strong in Outfield.

Joe Tinker has a strong set of outfielders in Flack, Williams, Zwilling, Schulte, and Mann. All of them are likely to be carried, and it looks as if the first three mentioned will be the trio on duty when the season opens.

Saier at first and Zim at third are infield quantities about which Tinker will not have to worry. If Steve Yerkes achieves anything near his Boston form, second base will be well cared for also. Shortstop seems the only infield spot about which there is any considerable doubt. Mike Doolan is expected to take care of that situation after he gets into shape, and it looks as if Tinker will intrust the job to Eddie Mulligan until the veteran is ready for hard work.

Archer looks more active behind the bat than he has in three years, and should have a great season with such a reliable helper as Bill Hendrix, Jim McConnell, Hendrix, and Vaughn, there are a couple of pitchers in good shape, and still two or three more who should come along before weather arrives.

Flack looks better than ever before and is strong against St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Brooklyn. Packard and Beaton may not be used much before Brooklyn. Packard and Beaton may not be used much before the middle of June. Doolan should take up the burden when hot weather comes.

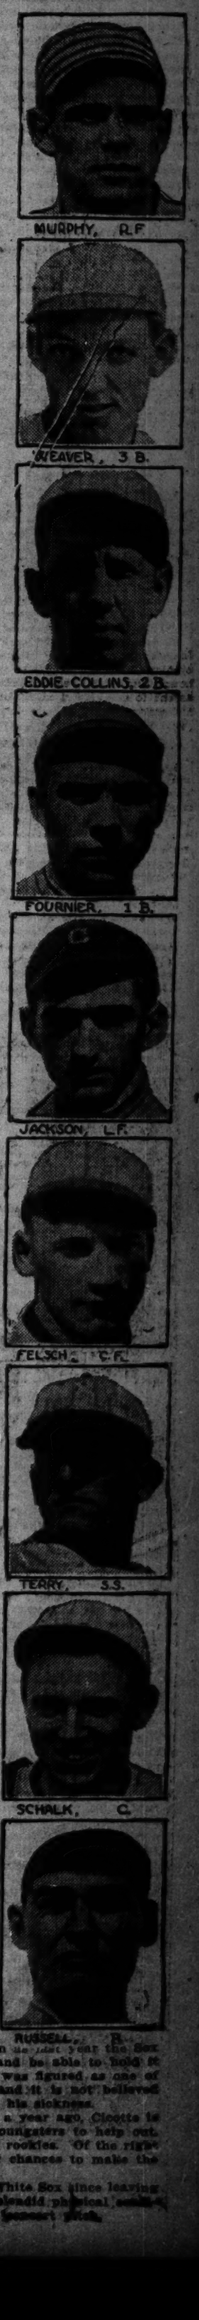
The Cubs as a team haven't displayed the quick wit of the old Cub days, and as a whole lineup Tinker will manage from the bench, and it looks as if the players will be on their own. Tinker will manage from the bench, and it looks as if the players will be on their own. Tinker has a reputation for quick wit, and often there isn't time for that science at the bench for wit, and often there isn't time for that science at the bench for wit, and

THE DAYS OF REAL SPORT.

SANBORN DECLARES SOX SHOULD BE FAVORITES

Comiskey's Team Is Strengthened More than Any Other Club in the American League.

RUSSELL WILL FACE TIGERS.



Probable Lineup of Sox at Start of Flag Race.

Murphy, rf.	Fournier, 1b.	Terry, ss.
Weaver, 3b.	Jackson, lf.	Schalk, c.
E. Collins, 2b.	Felsch, cf.	Russell, p.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Which of two lineups he will start the season with Manager Rowland of the White Sox does not expect to decide until the eve of the pennant race, which opens next Wednesday. He has not yet picked his outfield trio nor his pitcher.

Depending on whether Eddie Murphy or John Collins is the third man in the gardens, the batting order against Detroit in the first game will be either:

Murphy, rf; Weaver, 3b; E. Collins, 2b; Fournier, 1b; Jackson, lf; Felsch, cf; Terry, ss; Schalk, c, and the pitcher; or,

Felsch, cf; Weaver, 3b; E. Collins, 2b; Fournier, 1b; Jackson, lf; J. Collins, rf; Terry, ss; Schalk, c, and the pitcher.

Murphy or Shano.

Just what will determine his choice of a right fielder the Sox boss declines to state. It is my guess that the showing of the two rivals in the remaining practice games will have much to do with it. The former Mack outfielder is a left handed batsman. John Collins bats right handed. Murphy has been slower to reach top speed than the Sox veteran this spring. The combination may turn the scale at the start against Murphy.

The best guess on Manager Rowland's choice of slabman for the opening game is Tex Russell for two reasons: Tex used to be a whale against the Tigers, and Tex is in shape again. He was down to weight when he reported three weeks ago, and he has been working hard to get into perfect condition. Not only has he the old perfect control, but he seems to have recovered the hook, which eluded him most of the last two seasons.

Cicotte Is Second Choice.

If the honor is not assigned to Russell it is likely to go to Cicotte. Jim Scott would have been second choice to Russell if he had not been taken sick. It is doubtful if Faber will be in his best shape for the same reason.

Barring injuries, the Sox pilot will stand pat on the infield which has been working together well during most of the training trip, and if Schalk has more than one leg to stand on he will be behind the mask.

Going into the battle in their present condition, the White Sox ought to be favorites. There is no questioning the fact that they look like a better equipped outfit than last year, when they finished third after leading the race most of the first half. If Boston or Detroit, who beat out the Sox, have strengthened materially it has not shown in the advance dope.

Other Teams Strengthened.

Manager Jones is expected to make his combined Browns and Sloufeds a tough proposition. The rejuvenated Cleveland team will play with a different spirit and ought to be stronger with the material added last year. Baker will strengthen the attack of the Yankees, and the old fox, Connie Mack, always has to be reckoned with until his cards are on the table. But it is doubtful if any one of those four teams has increased its strength more than the White Sox have.

At present it looks as if Terry solved the infield problem because he is a strong defensive factor, playing his own position fast and steadily and working with Eddie Collins smoothly. Whether or not the youngster can hit major league pitching will not be known until he gets up against it, but he makes the pitcher pitch to him, and even if he does not hit .200 he will tighten up the left side of the infield, because Weaver plays better at third than he did at short.

Better Even Without Terry.

Even if Terry falls down on his assignment, Manager Rowland can make up a better infield than he had last year, for both Moriarty and McMullen can play third better than anything we saw in a Sox suit last year, and Fautsch may outhit Terry enough to win the regular shortstop berth.

Joe Jackson has acquired the White Sox spirit and is not only going after the batting championship with confidence but believes he is on a team of champions at last. Felsch has regained the batting stride out of which he was thrown last summer by an injured foot, and even if he fails to keep hitting there are John Collins and Murphy to round out a better outfield than that of a year ago now.

With Schalk, Lapp, and Lynn for catchers, the manager will have nothing to worry about, as was the case last season whenever Schalk got a bump.

If the veteran pitchers were in as good condition as last year the Sox ought to get the jump on the other fellows again and be able to hold it with their additional strength. But Jim Scott, who was figured as one of the old reliables, will not be ready for the start, and it is not believed Faber has got into top form in the short time since his sickness.

To offset that, Russell and Bens are better than a year ago, Cicotte is as good as ever, and there are several promising youngsters to help out. Danforth seems to be the pick of the two left handed rookies. Of the right handers, Eller and Galvin seem to have about equal chances to make the team.

Owing to the frigid weather encountered by the White Sox since leaving Texas, it has been impossible to keep them in the splendid physical condition they had attained on the Dallas training circuit, so pessimist think

RED SOX TRADE TRIS SPEAKER TO CLEVELAND

New York, April 8.—Tristam Speaker, one of the greatest outfielders in baseball and for the last two years the highest salaried player in the game, was traded today by the Boston Americans to the Cleveland club of the same league.

The deal, which was closed here by Manager William Carrigan of Boston and Robert McRoy of Cleveland, came after many rumors that the world's champions were to part with their brightest star, but nevertheless it caused considerable surprise. Speaker was one of the mainstays of the Boston club, both in fielding and batting, and contributed largely to the winning by his team of two world's series during his eight years with the Red Sox.

Two Indians in Trade.

In return for Speaker Boston will receive, Manager Carrigan said, two players, Pitcher S. P. Jones and another to be chosen later, and a cash consideration. The amount to be paid was not announced.

The release of Speaker is said to have been caused by inability to come to terms on the question of salary. Two years ago, when Speaker was eagerly sought by the Federals, he was given a contract for two years at a salary reputed to have been $18,500, the highest ever paid a ball player.

To close this deal Joseph J. Lannin, owner of the Red Sox, met Speaker at the dock upon his return from a trip around the world with the White Sox and Giants. At the passing away of the Federal league Lannin offered Speaker a contract for this year calling for a much smaller salary, said to be about $8,000. They failed to come to terms.

With Boston Since 1908.

Speaker is 32 years old. He went to Boston in 1908. With the exception of his first year, he batted for an average of .300 in the eight years he was with the Red Sox. His best year was 1912, when his average was .383. Last year he batted .322. He throws left handed.

Jones participated in forty-eight games for Cleveland last year, but was used chiefly as relief pitcher. He is credited with having won three and lost eight games. His batting average was .156.

Red Sox Get $20,000 Cash?

Boston, Mass., April 8.—The transaction today by which Speaker goes to Cleveland ranks with the greatest financially in the history of the game. Although President Lannin of the Red Sox would not disclose the figures, information obtained here placed the amount of the cash consideration with the release value of the two players which Cleveland turns over to the Red Sox at approximately $20,000. In addition, the deal represents a saving of another $10,000 to the Boston club, the difference between the salary which Speaker sought and that which his successor will receive.

Clarence Walker, purchased a few days ago from the St. Louis Browns, will play center field for the Red Sox. With a batting record almost the equal of Speaker's and a strong throwing arm, the newcomer is expected by the management to go far toward filling Speaker's place. In fielding it is expected the ranging ability of Hooper and Lewis will be of assistance in covering the ground over which Speaker was master.

Cost Over $50,000, Says Dunn.

Cincinnati, O., April 8.—James Dunn, owner of the Cleveland Indians, today said that the price paid for Tris Speaker, star Red Sox center fielder, was over $50,000.

In the Wake of the News

By RING W. LARDNER

THE DIARY OF A SIREN.

APRIL 6.

I AM nearly heart broken, diary. Lennie is angry at me, though why I know not, and my girlish modesty will prevent me from writeing to find out. I am afraid all is over between us and all on account of a misunderstanding. Something I said in my last letter to him must of given him offense and wounded him deeply. Oh that I should be the one to wound him who I love above all else in the world.

I have read my letter that I wrote him over and over in the hopes of trying to discover what I said to hurt him. He had asked me to learn what Mr. Weeghman thought of him and it may have been my report in answer to that request that caused his anger though what Mr. Weeghman said seemed to me to be a high compliment but I know so little about baseball that I may be mistaken. What Mr. Weeghman said was that Lennie had the best control he ever saw in a left handed pitcher and that he hit those Philadelphia bats right in the middle and that he was so clever that he could learn nothing from either Mr. Tinker the captain or Mr. Brown the coacher. I am sure I quoted Mr. Weeghman correct but the incident has spoiled my life and shattered my fondest dreams.

Here is Lennie's cruel letter which I will never answer.

"Well Miss Smart I suppose you think you are mighty smart but you are not as smart as you think you are. You can tell Weeghman for me that I said he was a smart sleck and Tinker's another one and they can take there ball club and jump in the lake with it and if they dont like my work why dont they say so to my face and not say so behind my back and why dont they give me my release and let me go with a good ball club and you can tell him for me that his club will finish in the pennant race just like they finished against the Philadelphia club down in Tampa and if Tinker wins a ball game with that club he has got it will be because the umpire is his brother in law.

The sooner they give me my release the better I will like it and I want you to be sure and tell that to Weeghman. I would tell it to Tinker only I am scared that if I spoke to him at all my temper would get the best of me and I would kill him. Be sure and tell Weeghman what I say to tell him.

"As for you Miss Smart you can jump in the lake yourself and I hope theres nobody around to pull you out and if you was the last girl in the world I would die like a bachelor. You were trying to put something over on me and get me to spend my money on you and make a joke out of me but the joke is on you and you can take a jump in the lake. I dont have to stand for getting made a fool of by a girl like you and theres a dozen girls I can have if I want them and every one of them got you beat 40 ways.

"This will be all for you and me and dont write no letter to me because I wont open it and tell Weeghman the sooner he gives me my release the better I will like it. Be sure and tell him. Tell him I would bust him in the eye if I was there and its a good thing he is in Chicago and not where I can get him. Tell him that Miss Smart."

And he did not even sign the letter. Oh diary what have I done to deserve a broken heart and a spoiled life at my age. Would that my girlish modesty would allow me to write and ask for an explanation and tell him all that is in my heart but even if I did write he would not open the letter.

APRIL 7.

Another letter came from Lennie today. Just a note but maybe it means that he cannot bear the thought of giving me up forever and that is why he wrote for there was really nothing important in the letter.

"Miss Smart," he wrote, "Never mind telling Weeghman those things I asked you to tell him. I had rather tell him myself and I will tell him as soon as I get a chance. Dont say nothing to him about what I said. I had rather tell him myself so dont say nothing about it. Be sure and not say nothing to Weeghman. I will tell him when I see him."

I would not of told Mr. Weeghman any way. But now I am afraid that Lennie will kill him when they meet and I would always feel that it was partly my fault.

SOX II. IDLE; TRY BOWLING

St. Joseph, Mo., April 8.—[Special.]—Today's postponement upset the pitching calculations of Manager Shano Collins of the Sox Yannigans. He had intended using Faber today and Bens tomorrow, reserving the recruit twirlers for the battle at Ottumwa.

As both of the veterans are expected to get nine innings of work each between now and Wednesday, Faber will twirl tomorrow and Bens at Ottumwa. This will leave Galvin and Clark to divide things at Rockford Tuesday.

All the Yans were disappointed because bad weather interfered with today's game. There were three inches of snow on the sidewalk at breakfast time. This cleared off, but the league grounds were soggy and the air as cold as early February.

Collins, Bens, and Faber had a special bowling match in the afternoon, each winning a game. High scores were: Faber, 166; Collins, 159, and Bens, 154. Those who have seen Bens pitch remember a particular revolving motion he makes with his arm before delivering the ball. He uses the same in bowling.

FIVE RUN RALLY AIDS ROWLANDS NIP MILLERS, 6-3

Minneapolis, Minn., April 8.—[Special.]—Cold weather, soggy ground, a field fringed with snow, and a good class A A team couldn't keep the White Sox from winning or put a stop to the long string of successes of Rowland's first team today. The Sox mauled R. Williams for four hits in the second inning, and the Millers had an erratic spell, booting the ball when the Sox weren't pelting to safe territory. This gave the big leaguers four runs—enough to win. The final score was 6 to 3.

Eller Starts Rally.

Hod Eller, pitcher, essayed the role of an outfielder and started the big rally of the Sox in the second inning. Smith kicked Terry's grounder and Russell beat out a hit, filling the sacks. Murphy and Collins poked out singles, R. Williams uncorked a wild heave, and Weaver and Jackson pulled off a double steal, giving the Sox three more runs.

Weaver doubled and scored in the fourth on an infield out by Jackson after advancing on Collins' safe bunt. Massey's homer over the right field wall, with one on, in the fifth, gave the Millers two runs. Acosta doubled in the sixth, advancing on Altizer's safe rap, and scored when Knight forced Dave at second.

Tex Preps for Opener.

Russell pitched seven innings and looked good to Manager Rowland. Claude Williams finished the game for the Sox and was a bit wild. He settled down after issuing passes in the eighth and ninth innings, and wasn't scored on. Score:

NOTES OF THE WHITE SOX.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 8.—[Special.]—Fast double plays by Eddie Collins and Terry were features of the game.

Weaver was sore after the game. He was hit twice by pitched balls.

The news that Speaker had been sold to Cleveland was a big surprise for the Sox.

Fournier went to first base in the seventh to finder his injured leg and Jackson went to left field.

Acosta was a tough man for the Sox pitchers when with Washington. He made a little trouble for Russell, getting a double to the right field fence.

The banquet to be given the Sox in Minneapolis was called off. It was organized for President Comiskey and Manager Rowland. The Sox president was compelled to send his regrets and Rowland isn't strong for banquets at this time of the year.

BAILEY IS SENT TO TOLEDO.

Bill Bailey of the Cub pitching staff was released last night to the Toledo club of the American association after a long distance telephone conversation between President Weeghman of the north side club and Manager Bresnahan of the Mudhens. Bailey, who is a southpaw, was one of Tinker's Federal league hurlers last season and was obtained from the Baltimore Feds, to whom he jumped from the International league the previous year.

BORDEN STARTS ON ADVENTURE TRIP TOMORROW

Millionaire Explorer Will Quit Lake Shore Drive Home for Bleak Arctic Regions.

In quest of further adventures, John Borden, Chicago millionaire, hunter, yachtsman, and explorer, will leave his comfortable home at Lake Shore drive and Bellevue place tomorrow and start for Alaska. He expects to spend the summer in the arctic waters.

Mr. Borden will take three Chicago friends with him. They are Charles Knickerbocker, Norris Bokum, and Rochester Slaughter. The trip will be a combination pleasure and business trip. In partnership with Capt. Louis Lane, a whaler and explorer of Seattle, Wash., Mr. Borden has started a fur trading and whaling company.

The boat on which the party will sail is being built in Seattle and is almost ready. It is a three masted schooner, 136 feet long, and will be called the Great Bear. It will have a powerful Diesel auxiliary engine. There will be a crew of thirty-three men, including the four from Chicago.

Go First to Siberian Coast.

The schooner will go first to the Siberian coast, and then will double back north of Alaska to a point where the fur trading company has men engaged in collecting furs. It will be well stocked with provisions, and the party will look for Capt. Steffansson, the explorer, to whom Capt. Lane sold the schooner Polar Bear last September. Steffansson is expecting Lane Borden to come after him this fall.

It is uncertain whether or not the Great Bear will be able to return to Seattle before a year from next summer. The condition of the ice will determine that. Mr. Borden expects to return in the fall, whether or not the boat is able to make the journey. If necessary he will return earlier by another boat.

Movies to Be Taken.

There will be a motion picture operator and camera with the expedition to make pictures of whaling and shooting in the arctic. Mr. Borden hopes to get some moving pictures of the capture of a whale.

It will be the second trip Mr. Borden has made to Alaskan waters, but this time he will go farther north than formerly. In 1912 he built the Adventuress, a 100 foot schooner yacht, which he later sold as a pilot boat, and made a voyage into Bering sea. He is 32 years old and has carried his explorations and adventures to all parts of the world.

The Chicago group will leave at 8 o'clock tomorrow night for Los Angeles and will go from there to Seattle. The expedition expects to start from Seattle about May 15.

CLYNE OPENS FEDERAL WAR ON BANKRUPTCY CROOKS.

Announces Campaign After Judge Humphrey Sends Three to Prison for Hiding Assets.

Evidence that several lawyers have assisted bankrupt litigants in concealing assets will be presented to the federal grand jury this week, District Attorney Clyne announced yesterday. Indictments will be sought on charges of conspiracy to defraud creditors.

Mr. Clyne made the announcement after Federal Judge Humphrey had sentenced each of the three members of the clothing firm of Schloss & Aserson, 312 West Jackson boulevard, to two years in Leavenworth penitentiary. They had been convicted by a jury of a conspiracy to conceal assets. The men sentenced were Gustave A. Meyer, Hymen Aserson, and Morris F. Schloss.

"This makes fifteen convictions of this kind that we have obtained," Mr. Clyne said. "We intend to rid the town of crooks who try to take advantage of the bankruptcy laws. They couldn't operate if it weren't for legal advice, and we are going right after these lawyers. We have evidence ready to place before the grand jury."

MY NAME'S HERBERT KLUNK.

"Herbert Klunk," which was as nearly as a golden haired 5 year old could pronounce it, spent last night in the detective bureau while the police searched for his parents. The boy wandered away when taken on a shopping tour and was picked up by a policeman. He employed himself merrily running from one room to another in the bureau while the police waited a call from some anxious parent.

J. G. MOULTON'S MIND O. K.

James G. Moulton, a former member of the art firm of Moulton & Ricketts, was found to be of sound mind and capable of handling his estate of $10,000 in the verdict of a jury returned to Judge Horner in the Probate court last night. Relatives alleged Mr. Moulton was feeble minded. The jury was out several hours.

TANNER WINNER IN EMPIRE STATE; BLOW FOR ROOT

Election of Chairman Is Taken as Boost for Chances of Hughes.

New York, April 8.—Responding to pleas that a crisis confronts both the Republican party and the country and that the national situation ough to take precedence over factional disputes, the newly elected Republican state committee today reelected as chairman Frederick C. Tanner of this city.

The result was regarded by the chairman's friends as adding strength to the movement favoring Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes for the presidency and toward a renomination for Gov. Charles S. Whitman.

Mr. Tanner's supporters placed this interpretation on his reelection because of the fact that State Senator Charles W. Wicks of Utica, his defeated rival, was put forward by William Barnes of Albany, United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, State Senator Elon R. Brown, and others, who favored the nomination of Elihu Root at the Chicago convention. The Tanner faction supported the Hughes movement.

Vote Is 82 to 63.

The vote polled today was 82 for Mr. Tanner to 63 for Mr. Wicks. Five of the 150 members of the committee were absent.

No candidate for president was mentioned, either by speakers or in a resolution adopted after Mr. Tanner's reelection. This memorial urged the nomination of "a tried Republican, in whose record and character the nation can rely as a guarantee for wise statesmanship in the management of foreign and domestic affairs."

Mr. Tanner later indicated that personally he was opposed to Theodore Roosevelt, but he would not make known a preference between Justice Hughes and Mr. Root.

"He must be a real Republican," the chairman said. "He must be a Republican, enrolled as a Republican, who has been in the party for a number of years. I hope that only a Republican will be nominated. Don't let any member of the committee misunderstand me." It was said by the chairman's friends that he leaned toward Justice Hughes.

Root Remains Silent.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—"I am much obliged to the gentlemen and I am grateful for their good opinion," was the only comment Elihu Root would make today upon the address issued in New York last night by seventy-four prominent citizens favoring his nomination.

The reelection of Tanner was a victory for the Whitman faction. Wicks is an anti-Whitman man. Wadsworth, who led the opposition to Tanner, was identified with the movement which resulted in the indorsement of Root by seventy-four Republicans in a statement issued last night, while Whitman is an avowed Hughes man.

LORIMER ARGUMENT GOES ON

Attorney Fails to Score in Attempt to Have Conspiracy Count Dismissed.

Another day of argument was passed yesterday in the trial of William Lorimer before Judge Dever. Albert Fink, counsel for the defense, continued his attack on the conspiracy indictment under which the former senator is being tried. At one time Judge Dever announced that he would continue the session until all arguments were in. He kept the lawyers at it for hours without respite. When at the end of this time Mr. Fink began to take up "another phase" the judge gave up and adjourned court until Monday. The only result of the day's proceedings was that the prosecution agreed to dismiss as immaterial and not in line with the evidence the only count which the defense does not attack.

REMINDS YOU, PERHAPS, OF DAYS OF REAL SPORT.

Ringling Brothers' Circus Arrives in Chicago This Morning in 80 Cars from Winter Quarters.

The circus arrives this morning.

Out of Baraboo, Wis., four long trains, loaded down with lions, tigers, elephants, sawdust, clowns, peanuts, lemonade, acrobats, wirewalkers, aerialists, and freaks, were started on their way last night, leaving the big winter quarters shortly before dusk. They are expected to arrive in the Northwestern yards at an early hour this morning, and the entire cargo of world wonders will probably be safely sheltered within the walls of the Coliseum before noon today.

It requires eighty-nine cars to transport the Ringling Bros.' aggregation to Chicago this season, and when the big show opens its season here next Saturday night there will be an all new circus, with the largest menagerie ever carried by a traveling amusement enterprise. More than 108 cages of wild animals, a family of giraffes, forty-one elephants, and a herd of thirty-five camels will be transferred from the railroad yards to the Coliseum during the early hours this morning.

The new fairyland spectacle, "Cinderella," which is to be produced for the first time in Chicago, requires an entire special train, devoted exclusively to scenery and costumes. The paraphernalia for the new circus "thriller," "Cedora of the Golden Globe," occupies the space of five railroad cars.

QUESTION: "WHO DONE IT?"

Propinquity of Government Gin and Negro Scrubwomen Vital in This Mystery.

Three months ago a couple of dock laborers rescued a cask of forty-eight gallons of gin from the wreck of the steamer Iowa and turned it over to Daniel J. Chapin, chief internal revenue agent. Mr. Chapin stored it on the fifteenth floor of the federal building in a little room near where the Negro scrub women and men keep their effects.

Yesterday three gallons was gone.

Who done it?

ALDERMEN RUSH PHTHISIS INQUIRY; HOLD ON TO BOOKS

Efficiency Corps to Work Night and Day on Records at Sanitarium.

fied gentlemen on the jump for quite a while.

McCoid Squelched.

Ald. Charles E. Merriam's sarcasm was working at high tension and his barbed shafts frequently were projected in the direction of Attorney McCoid, who was squelched by the committee on several occasions.

He was termed an "outsider," was told that no one had invited him to attend the meeting, and finally informed that if he desired to appear before the committee for the mayor, the corporation counsel, or any one else, he had better put his request in writing and they would then decide whether they wanted him hanging around.

The committee convened at 1:30 o'clock with Chairman Richert presiding.

Those at Meeting.

There appeared as representatives of civic associations the following:

Sigmund Zeisler, Civil Service Reform association.

Richard E. Schmidt, City club.

H. K. Tenney and H. N. Gottlieb, for Attorney Charles Hamill, representing Dr. Sachs in the inquiry begun before his death.

Grace Abbott, Women's City club.

Amelia Sears, Juvenile Protective association.

Zeisler, Schmidt, Tenney, and Gottlieb were invited by the committee to sit with it, to have a voice in all the proceedings, but not to have a vote.

Outlines Complete Inquiry.

The committee then adopted a plan of inquiry outlined by the efficiency bureau, which provides for a thorough investigation of all phases of the hospital work from the time of its establishment in 1911.

Then Mr. McCoid arose to speak. Before he had got going Ald. Merriam asked him whom he represented.

"The board of directors of the sanitarium," replied McCoid.

"Who appointed you?" asked Merriam.

"The board appointed me," he said.

"At whose request?"

"Well," replied McCoid, "I understand my appointment came from the corporation counsel."

"Who asked the corporation counsel to appoint you?"

"Now, wait a minute," shot back McCoid. "Are you trying to investigate me?"

"I merely want to say," remarked Merriam, "that you are not here at the request of this committee. You are merely a spectator."

McCoid Subsides, but Bobs Up.

McCoid subsided and Ald. Nance suggested that an invitation be sent to the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute, a private institution of which Dr. Sachs was president at the time of his suicide, to be represented at the inquiry.

McCoid again arose.

"Has the city council authorized this investigation?" he asked. "You are attempting to do—"

"Now I object to this outsider coming here," broke in Merriam.

McCoid ignored the interruption and proceeded, with both talking at the same time.

"What you are doing," shouted McCoid, "is trying to drag Sachs' body out on to the front page of the Sunday morning papers for political purposes. You are making politics—"

Merriam was white. He got up and drowned out McCoid's voice.

"We don't have to sit here," he said, "and argue with an outsider."

McCoid sat down and the committee proceeded to formally adopt the line of inquiry suggested by the efficiency experts.

"Now, Gentlemen—"

McCoid was up again then.

"Do I understand that I have no right here?" he asked. "Now, gentlemen I want to say this: There is probably—I say probably—a disposition here to attack the mayor. I don't think you intend to make this an impartial investigation, and I say that because of the people you have called in here to sit with you. Here is Mr. Zeisler and Mr. Tenney and others who represent organizations that make a fighting the mayor and cannot make an impartial inquiry. Besides, you have no power to administer an oath. This is all grand stand."

Merriam again intervened. He told McCoid to sit down.

"Go hire the Garrick or Cohan's opera house if you want to make a stump speech," was Merriam's parting shot.

Zeisler Now Angry.

Mr. Zeisler took umbrage at Mr. McCoid's intimation that he couldn't be fair.

"The association I represent is not fighting the mayor," he said. "I object to that statement. We are simply doing the business of watching the administration of the civil service laws and calling attention to violation of those laws when there is violation."

When order was restored it was decided to call as witnesses at the next session Supt. J. W. Coon, Business Director Frank E. Wing, Health Commissioner Robertson, H. N. Higinbotham, first president of the board, and W. A. Wieboldt, who resigned from the board last fall.

Startler for Committee.

Then Attorney Zeisler startled the committee by announcing he had just been informed by Mr. Wing that Capt. Coffin of the civil service commission had sent two police officers to the sanitarium with a subpoena duces tecum to bring the books of the sanitarium to the commission's office in the city hall.

"Mr. Wing informed me just now," he said, "that the officers and Dr. Coon are on their way to the city hall. He has just received the information from the sanitarium. I have advised Mr. Wing to disregard the subpoena, for I consider it illegal. I have a sneaking suspicion that it is an attempt by the civil service commission to forestall the inquiry by this committee, as the civil service commission does not resume its inquiry until April 17."

"When was this subpoena served?" inquired Ald. Nance.

"Just an hour ago," said Mr. Zeisler.

"Who signed the subpoena?" asked Ald. Fisher.

"Capt. Coffin," said Ald. Kerner.

Police with Dr. Coon.

Mr. Wing, who was in the committee room, then broke in to explain that two policemen—Officers Murphy and Sullivan of Chief Healey's office—had served the subpoena and were then on their way to the city hall with Dr. Coon.

Mr. McCoid again arose and said that the council committee could have the books whenever it wanted them, but for the present they would be in the custody of the civil service commission.

Ald. Merriam had a different notion. He wanted to know what could be done to protect the committee in its rights and suggested that a committee of three be named instanter to determine what should be done.

Chairman Richert named Attorneys Zeisler and Tinney and Ald. Kerner. They repaired to an adjoining room to map out a plan of offense and defense.

They returned in a few minutes and reported that the books were then on the way to the civil service commission's rooms. Ald. Kerner suggested that a subcommittee be sent to the office of Capt. Coffin to demand the books when they arrived. He said they should be there in a few minutes.

McCoid on Job.

Mr. McCoid again arose. "This committee," he said, "has no right to these books. These men with whom you are working here are working against the board of directors of the sanitarium." McCoid looked straight at Business Director Wing.

Mr. Zeisler arose to speak, and McCoid waved him aside.

Ald. Merriam, angered, jumped up and said to McCoid:

"Sit down, McCoid. You have no right to tell a member of this committee to sit down. Mr. Zeisler has the right to speak. You haven't."

"Pardon me, Ald. Merriam," broke in Mr. Zeisler. "I though Mr. McCoid had finished speaking."

Some one suggested that McCoid was talking against time in order to give the officers time to get the books to Capt. Coffin's office.

Forward! March!

In double quick time the committee named the following subcommittee to go at once to the office of Capt. Coffin and demand the books:

Ald. Kerner, Ald. Doyle, Ald. Capitain, and Attorneys Zeisler and Tenney.

The subcommittee, Mr. McCoid, and the newspaper men made a dash for the elevator.

"I don't see why our chairman picked all us little men to go up against that bunch upstairs," laughed Ald. Capitain, as they shot up with the elevator.

McCoid was out first and hurried to the outer office of Capt. Coffin. He let in a couple of newspaper men and then shut the gate. As he disappeared in the inside hallway a reporter pushed the button, letting the aldermen through the gate. They proceeded down the hallway, when McCoid reappeared and closed the door leading to Coffin's office.

"Just a minute, gentlemen," he said, as he closed the door.

"I am a member of the city council," shouted Ald. Capitain, "and I propose to go in there!"

He Slams for Capitain.

"Just a minute," said McCoid again. "I know you are a member of the city council. I was once. I know what an alderman amounts to."

"But I want you to understand, Mr. McCoid," shot back Capitain, his lips quivering and his face going white, "I want you to understand you nor any one else can slam a door in my face."

"Now, don't get excited," said McCoid, smiling.

Capt. Coffin had not come to see what the fuss was about, and just as Capitain was finishing his remarks to McCoid, Dr. Coon, hospital attendants, and the two police officers, carrying the sanitarium books, entered the outer office.

The council committee and Attorneys Zeisler, Tenney, and Gottlieb barred their way. Then they surrounded them. The attorneys quickly informed Dr. Coon that he didn't have to deliver the books to Coffin, and that he should turn about face and rush for the council committee room.

Mr. McCoid broke through the lines and instructed Dr. Coon to obey the subpoena.

"This is not legal," broke in Mr. Zeisler. "They have no legal right to demand these books. You are not bound to deliver them to Mr. Coffin."

Dr. Coon and his assistants, however, preceded by the policemen, walked through to Capt. Coffin's inner office. The captain sat on the side of his desk with his hat on.

Another wrangle ensued there, when Dr. Coon said:

"I have answered your subpoena, Capt. Coffin, and am here with the books. I understand, however, that I am custodian of the records, and I am here to testify."

Capt. Coffin said the inquiry would not proceed then, but that they desired the books to make an audit, beginning Monday morning.

Attorney Gottlieb broke in and instructed Dr. Coon to take the books back to the sanitarium, and said he would be held personally responsible for them.

Back to Sanitarium.

Dr. Coon then said that unless Capt. Coffin was ready to proceed with the inquiry he would return the books to the sanitarium.

"If you do that," broke in McCoid, "you do it over our protest."

Dr. Coon, however, gathered several of the ledgers, his assistants the others, and they all started out.

"Where are you going?" asked McCoid.

"To the council committee room," replied Dr. Coon.

"To the council committee room," replied Dr. Coon.

And they did.

There was laughing as the subcommittee hurried back to the elevator and to the lower floor. As they entered the committee room with the books other laughter broke forth and everybody smiled.

Mr. Wing was then called before the committee and identified the several ledgers. He explained the system used and gave a brief history of the institution. Under questioning by Ald. Merriam he said that when the 1916 budget was made up he and Dr. Coon suggested an appropriation of $750 000 for the current year. Under the law the sanitarium is entitled to about $1,000,000, if it needs that much.

Health Commissioner Robertson, he said, suggested that the full $1,000,000 be asked and it was done.

Dr. Sachs, he said, did not vote himself, as he never had done so unless in a tie. The other two members, Dr. Robertson and F. Bowden De Forest, voted for the $1,000 000.

It was then brought out by Attorney Zeisler and Mr. Wing that the sanitarium was not legally under civil service, but that the officials of the hospital voluntarily had asked that the civil service commission take charge of the employés.

When this was disclosed Ald. Merriam pressed the point that the civil service commission had no legal right to impound the books.

"That is correct," said Mr. Zeisler. "And I doubt whether this committee has. But I know what I would do if I were the committee."

"What would you do?" asked Merriam.

Night and Day.

At first Mr. Zeisler said he would not tell, but later he said: "I would have this committee proceed at once to the investigation of these books and keep at it night and day until it is finished."

Again Ald. Kerner and Attorneys Zeisler and Tenney were commissioned to retire from the room and suggest a program.

They returned with the suggestion that the efficiency bureau of the committee proceed at once and keep at it "night and day" and report on Monday, if possible.

Major Miles then got busy on the telephone, rounding up his experts, and in a few minutes they were on their way to the sanitarium with Dr. Coon and the books.

NO RICH HOME FOR DOROTHY, COURTS RULING

Clifford Girl Given to Grandma, Who Says Wealth Is Not Everything.

Dorothy Clifford, whose parents killed themselves three months ago, and who was desired as a daughter by fifteen applicants, among them two childless millionaire families, yesterday was given by Probate Judge Horner to the care of her poor-penniless grandmother, Mrs. Ellen Fay, of Roundhead, O.

A thin old woman in black dress carried herself with erectness and offering words to none, Mrs. Fay entered the courtroom with her attorney, A. A. Worsley.

"Please take the witness stand," directed Judge Horner.

Mrs. Fay obeyed.

Chance for Rich Home.

"I have summoned you here," began the judge, "to tell you the opportunities offered your granddaughter. I realize full well you are the nearest blood relation and therefore have a claim on Dorothy which no one else possesses.

"But I want you to know that if you relinquish her she can be raised in a home of wealth where she will enjoy comfort and luxury and everything possible will be done for her. Do you think she would be happier if you gave her up?"

"Riches Not Everything."

"Riches are not everything" spoke the white haired widow, looking straight before her and barely opening her lips. "Luxury is not everything. I have raised four children, and I can raise Dorothy. I have enough to give her moderate comfort and good education.

"I loved her mother, my daughter. I can give Dorothy the love of a mother and the love of a grandmother. No one else can give her that. I loved my daughter as I loved my life, and no one else can give my granddaughter the love I have for her. With me she will be as happy as in a millionaire's palace."

Grandma Gets Custody.

"You have made investigation of these applicants for the child," said Judge Horner to Attorney Worsley. "Among the names I gave you are some of great wealth; names of people who did not desire publicity unless they were to get Dorothy, unless they were in the end to be allowed to adopt her.

"Since Mrs. Fay refuses to give up the child I will order that she gets it. File an adoption petition in the County court on Monday and then Dorothy will be turned over to her."

Dorothy, who had been playing in an ante-chamber, was now led into the courtroom. She saw her grandmother from far off and ran to her. The shrunken cheek was pressed against the velvet face. Tears came to Mrs. Fay. She whispered and repeated:

"Dorothy! Dorothy!"

The judge also ordered the $217 realized from the possessions of the girl's dead parents should be placed in a bank in her name and kept for her until she becomes of age.

DETROIT FIRE KILLS THREE.

Detroit, Mich., April 8.—In a fire which destroyed the home of Homer Dieble, 754 Marlborough avenue today, Mrs. Dieble, 22, and her two children, Irma, 4, and Evelyn, 2, were burned to death. The wife of William Dieble, who resided at the same place, escaped death by jumping from a second story window. She was seriously injured.

SON OF NORMAN B. REAM MUST PROVE HIS DIVORCE.

Question Raised in Court Whether or Not Decree Was Obtained by Fraud.

New York, April 8.—[Special.]—Louis Marshall Ream, who inherited a sixth of the $50,000,000 estate of his father, Norman B. Ream, must furnish proof in court that the annulment of his marriage to Eleanor Pendleton Davidson was not obtained by fraud.

Judge Henry V. Borst, sitting in special term in Saratoga, N. Y., ruled to that effect today upon motion of the young woman's attorneys. He set the trial for April 22 at Amsterdam.

The former Mrs. Ream alleges she consented to the annulment upon the representation of attorneys for her young husband that the justice who performed the marriage ceremony in Hoboken on Sept. 1, 1911, was acting without authority. She later learned, she says, that the marriage was legal.

PLANS ADOPTED FOR A MEMORIAL TO SACHS' WORK

New $250,000 Hospital to Stand as a Monument to Phthisis Expert.

A memorial to Dr. Theodore B. Sachs in a manner befitting his services to the city was practically decided upon yesterday in the adoption of plans for a $250,000 tuberculosis hospital at Naperville.

The plans have been outlined by Otis & Clark. They provide for a two story colonial structure with big pavilions at the end and a cupola in the center.

Building Like Dr. Sachs Planned.

The building will be identical with that planned by Dr. Sachs and for the construction of which he expected to borrow the necessary funds.

The new building will occupy a place on the site of the Edwards sanatorium at Naperville. The plans have been approved by Mrs. Sachs as most nearly following out the ideas of her husband. A number of Chicago physicians already have made contributions to the fund.

Sanatorium Started in 1906.

The Edwards sanatorium was started in 1906, when Mrs. Keith Spalding purchased forty acres for the site and gave the money for the erection of the buildings. It was this sanatorium which gave the inspiration for the municipal tuberculosis sanitarium.

The plans for the proposed memorial will be submitted to a massmeeting in memory of Dr. Sachs to be held in the Auditorium this afternoon. With the final approval of the plans it is expected that construction work will be started.

MRS. MEISENBERG ASKS AID.

Mother of Boy Who Fell at Vera Cruz Wants Pension from Government.

Mrs. Meyer Meisenberg of 1450 South Racine avenue has taken the preliminary steps to obtain a pension. Her son, Samuel Meisenberg, was one of the marines who lost his life at Vera Cruz. She presented proof that Samuel was probably one of the first Americans to fall when the American forces landed in the Mexican city, April 21, 1914. The pension, if granted, will be $12 a month.

FRENCH THEATER ENDS

Manager Announces He Will Return to Chicago for Eight Weeks' Season Next Year.

BY ERIC DE LAMARTER.

With "Divorcons" and "L'Abbe Constantin," the two week season of the Theatre Francaise came to an end at Central Music Hall last evening.

M. Bonheur, manager of the organization, is happy in the increasing interest of the fortnight, which has resulted in enlisting the aid of the various French clubs of the city in support of a comprehensive theater scheme for next year.

"I expect to go to Paris in June," said he yesterday, "to engage a company of about forty players, with a guarantee fund sufficient to establish an eight week season here next winter, coincident with that in New York. About $6,000 is the response to our canvass of the last four audiences—subscriptions to be redeemed in seats. One matinée and two evening performances probably will be the subscription performances next season."

The performances of this fortnight have been excellent, despite the chill of small audiences at the outset and the hit or miss stage settings. Mlle. Greuze's Cyprienne in "Divorcons" was a captivating "high comedy" characterization, and M. Benedict's Des Prunelles interesting if rather foreign to our ideas of the nature. The piece, generally was played in a staccato, satiric fashion, owning not a little of its charm to the telling work of MM. Renavent and Cerny.

"L'Abbe Constantin" attracted a capacity audience, whose appreciation of the classic and its romantic interpretation was voluably expressed.

Widows Dissatisfied with Wills.

Mrs. Elisabeth C. Rend, widow of the late William P. Rend, millionaire coal and mine operator, and Mrs. Augusta D. Pfaelzer, widow of the late David M. Pfaelzer, assessor, are dissatisfied with the provisions made for them by their husbands' wills and have renounced these provisions in favor of their dower rights. Mrs. Rend was bequeathed $10,000 per year. Mrs. Pfaelzer was to receive an annuity of $7,500.

"MRS. PALM" NO LONGER; DOROTHEA VOLLMER AGAIN.

Girl Who Eloped with Chicago Man Said to Have Acceded at Last to Parents' Wishes.

Davenport, Ia., April 8.—[Special.]—Mrs. Edward Palm, daughter of former Congressman and Mrs. Henry Vollmer, has given up her boy husband, after months of protest against her irate parents' wishes, it is announced.

Mrs. Palm, it has been learned, has gone so far as to resume her maiden name, Miss Dorothea Vollmer. Palm and Miss Vollmer were married three months ago after a sensational elopement.

Palm was handed his passports from the Vollmer mansion several weeks ago, when his 19 year old bride was sent to California to recuperate from her escapade. Father Vollmer, enraged at the elopement, refused to permit his son-in-law to remain under his roof. Palm was told to get out and make good.

Mrs. Palm has completely secluded herself from Davenport society. To every invitation to a social affair she sends her regrets. For amusement she has joined a swimming class, composed largely of working girls. She gets up early each morning and spends several hours in the class work under the direction of an instructor of the Y. M. C. A.

Recently she recovered from an attack of smallpox, but still retains her beauty.

JAPANESE PRINTS STOLEN.

Young Man, Who Showed Ignorance of Oriental Art, Suspected of Theft.

S. Mori, an art dealer on the eighth floor of the Fine Arts building, was robbed yesterday of a portfolio containing thirty Japanese prints 18x25 inches and eighty years old, valued at $600. Mr. Mori said his place was visited by a young man who inquired after landscapes, but his evident ignorance of the subject caused him to be suspected. After the youth had gone the robbery was discovered. Dr. Frank Gunsaulus notified the police.

LOVE TO RESHAPE VEGETABLE EARS OF 'BAT' NELSON

His Smashed Nose Also Will Be Made Right Before Another Marital Venture.

Mr. Oscar Mathew Batling Nelson is in again.

He has been literally dragged in by the ears—for if it were not for a pair of the most misshapen, maltreated, hammered, and tortured ears ever worn by a pugilist he might still be on the outside of publicity looking in.

Bat is in love, but his ears have interfered. Divorced only a few weeks ago from the volcanic Denver cartoonist, Fay King, Bat admits he has been touched again in the heart. But the latest of his lady loves had declared she can't marry a man with such ears as "Bat" wears.

Also his nose is slightly askew and this is another reason the former champion of the lightweights must seek a beauty doctor before he can wend his way to the altar.

Soubrette, and Her Name's Sue.

"I'm not going to make a statement for the public," explains the pugilist, who now is a monologist, "but I have decided that inasmuch as I have retired from the ring, I may as well replace a few of the beauties of which I was robbed by pugilism."

But it is feared that Bat has not told the whole truth. He has admitted he has been to see a beauty specialist in the matter of having his cauliflower ears brought down to their normal size, but he hasn't stated that the cause of all this is a singing soubrette who played on the bill with him in a South Chicago theater.

"Her name, it is said, is 'Sue,'" and that's as far as the questioner could get. For as soon as the reporter asked "Sue who?" the battling person, discovering that he had gone too far, kept his counsel. He admitted, though, that Sue has not been averse to the attention he has been paying her.

"Cauliflower ears" are one of the results of intense pugilism. One stiff punch on the ear burns like fire. Two punches burn like more fire. But several hundred punches have a tendency to sort of macerate the cartilages of the outer ear, and the result is a puffy looking affair that is not unlike a real cauliflower.

Otherwise He's All Right.

This is what Sue has found unlovely about Bat, and it is a pair of these ears that must be brought back to nature before the former champion can hope to march to the altar with the singing soubrette.

The reduction of the "cauliflower" means a delicate series of operations wherein the mashed cartilages are reduced and formed into entirely new ears.

"So," explained Nelson, "when I step to the tune of the Lohengrin again, it'll be with brand new ears."

PROPOSES IN TAXI!

Society Girl Bares Detail of How David Popped the Question.

"The taxi hummed along the broad boulevard. Within there was a long silence. Then the man drew off his glove slowly. The palm of the girl's bare hand was moist, and so she turned it over. His closed on hers, and he proposed."

This paragraph, appearing under the heading "Snapshots" in the current number of the University of Chicago Literary Monthly and signed "K. K." gives the story of one of Chicago's society romances. For "K. K." it was found, is Miss Katherine Keith. "The man" must then be David Adler, whose engagement to Miss Keith was announced early in the year.

Miss Keith was graduated from the university last December, but has kept up her connection with the Literary Monthly. Perhaps similar intimate details of Miss Keith's life will be known soon, for the Atlantic Monthly has accepted her autobiography and will print it in the magazine's next issue. Maybe we will know what "he" said after "his hand closed on hers."

Miss Keith is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edson Keith of 1904 Prairie avenue.

EVIDENCE 162 YEARS OLD SENDS MAN TO BRIDEWELL.

Matthias Albanus, a Violin, Stolen by "Penniless and Homeless" Wanderer from His Benefactor.

The evidence in a larceny case before Judge Arnold Heap yesterday was 162 years old, yet it drew a fine of $25 and costs and a sentence of sixty days in the bridewell for Richard Adams.

The evidence was a Matthias Albanus violin, made, according to its markings, in Tyrol, West Austria, in 1754.

Joseph Frisbe of 17 East Grand avenue said he met Adams on the street March 26.

"He told me he was penniless and homeless, and I took him to my house and fed and sheltered him," Frisbe testified. "A week later he disappeared with my violin."

'FAST' FINISHED BY MRS. BISHOP; APPETITE GONE

Admits 33 Cent Shopgirl Diet Is "Fizzle" and Urges More Firesides.

men who should be heads of homes and the wives who would be the hearts of homes are widely separated.

Have Time for Family.

"Under sane conditions a normal man should be able to earn a living and have time for his family, his country, and to be a citizen. But now they go to work early in the morning and have no time to be men and women, as their wages are not enough to keep the machinery going. We are flying in the face of a tremendous force. The result is chaos.

"Thus I went about in the girls' hotels. These cooperative homes, such as the Eleanor clubs, are good as temporary abodes to reduce expenses. But these are unnatural homes, just as men's clubs are—the temporary comfort of them is sowing seeds of sorrow. And there is a life of havoc ahead—without home.

At Disrupted Fireside.

"After all the experiences in these girls' clubs and in the other places, I spent my last night in a disrupted home with Mrs. Nestor K. Clarkson and her five children at 1820 South Wabash avenue. Yet, in that home is where I found the nearest thing to happiness. There was no robbed motherhood there, and though the mother had just received her divorce and had lost her children by decree of the court, there was more peace and more happiness in the home than can be bought in any girls' club or hotel.

"I was glad to break the fast I had been keeping with the five children. We ate ham and eggs to our hearts' desire and were happy.

Will Not Starve, but——

"Nobody can starve on 33 cents a day for meals. But no one wants to try and live on that sum. From the letters and heart cries of girls I have received, I have learned that they want pretty things, and they should have them, too. If girls should lose their love for beauty and daintiness it would be like the loss of the perfume of the rose to the world.

"It is not for us to reform people or take liberties with their freedom, but for us to unblock—keep out of the way—and give a fair chance to every heart. The measure of a man is a measure of an angel. The life of religion is to be of use to human beings.

"The goal of every man and woman after this temporary period in clubs and hotels—should be a home."

Southern Editor Claims He Fired in Self-Defense When Attacked by Several Men.

Bunkie, La., April 8.—[Special.]—Lee Lanier, editor of the Bunkie Record, today shot and badly wounded W. F. Parker the Progressive candidate, in an effort to drive Lanier out of town, as a result of a political row.

HE DRINKS AND DRINKS—THEN EMBALMING FLUID!

Casey Found Sitting on Curb with a Bottle, but He Is Revived in Hospital.

"There's a poor man, holding a big bottle in his hands, sitting on the curb at Root street and Wentworth avenue," said an excited woman over the telephone to the desk sergeant in the stockyards police station. An ambulance was dispatched and the surgeon found James Casey stretched out across the curbstone, holding a partly filled two quart bottle by its neck. He could make no statement and the doctor took him and the bottle to the Englewood hospital.

Casey was subjected to a stomach pump and when he revived the doctors found the bottle contained embalming fluid.

"Why in the world did you drink embalming fluid?" asked one of the doctors.

"I must have been dead drunk—I'd been drinking all night. I don't know where I got the stuff," Casey replied.

Casey says he'll have to improve his taste.

Enforce Law on Standing Wagons.

A coroner's jury yesterday recommended that the ordinances pertaining to the leaving of wagons in the street for any period of time be more rigidly enforced in the inquest into the death of Abraham Tirsky of 3219 West Twelfth street, who was killed when he was brushed from the running board of an automobile by a standing wagon.

PENALTY FOR DOING DUTY: POLICEMAN QUITS FORCE.

Patrolman Kinney, 24 Years in Department, Resigns After Two Women Are Fined.

Policeman Daniel F. Kinney yesterday resigned from the force, declaring he had been penalized for doing his duty. Last Tuesday Kinney arrested two women, Violet Wilson and Edith McCarthy, for disorderly conduct. Subsequently Kinney was transferred to Cragin station. He said he would resign unless he was transferred back to Chicago avenue or given a furlough. Yesterday the cases came up in court and the Wilson woman was fined $10 and the McCarthy woman $5 by Judge Heap.

"The Wilson woman," Kinney said, "abused me and said she would get my star."

In the afternoon Kinney visited Chief Healey, who refused to grant his requests. Thereupon Kinney resigned. He had been on the force twenty-four years and will receive a pension.

Jeffery Light "Six"
Seven Passenger

You Who Are Going to Buy a "Six," Read This:

THERE are, possibly, five or six automobiles selling at between $2000 and $3000 and over, which can be compared with the Jeffery Light Six, in detail, appearance, and finish.

Certainly there is none selling at less than $2000.

And the price of the Jeffery Light "Six" is $1450.

We emphasize this matter of price because it is only by a critical comparison of the highest priced cars with the Jeffery "Six" that the immense margin of its supremacy, at its price, can be understood.

It is impossible to convey in a printed description the distinction, the style, the "class," if you please, of this car's appearance. You will sense it the minute you see it—it's the sort of car that makes the passer-by turn about and watch you out of sight.

And after all, isn't this what you want in your car—appearance and PERFORMANCE?

Not only is the Jeffery "Six" the most beautiful car upon Chicago streets today, but its road performance and power have never been equaled by any car selling within $500 of its cost. No other six, no eight, no twelve can match it.

We mean this, absolutely.

It is the most powerful car in which you have ever ridden. It will pick up from 3 to 60 miles an hour and will throttle down to less than a walk on direct drive. It will climb hills on direct with ease which no other cars selling within $500 of its price can make—a car unmatched for either the city or the longest tour.

We do not ask you to take our word for this; we say, buy this car on this basis:

You are to select your own test. You may make it flexibility, performance through sand and Cook County's mud, hill climbing ability—whatever you wish, or all of them combined, just as you wish. We will then take this car out on a side by side test with any other car in its price class which you can persuade to make the trial, and if we can not out-demonstrate the other car—if we cannot prove to your satisfaction that we have in this Jeffery a car of superior performance, you are to buy the other car.

In the months this offer has stood not one other car has dared to accept this challenge. The reason is simple enough. The drivers who have driven other sixes, eights, twelves, tell us this is the most powerful car in which they have ever sat. Yet it is a light car, economical, and

Backed by Centaur Service

Read, please, this letter. We have little to say down here about service, because Centaur Service goes with the cars we sell, as a matter of course, but our customers have a good deal to say about it. For instance—

MR. A. M. ROBBINS, Chicago, March 27, 1916.
President Centaur Motor Company, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you have had so many letters of commendation regarding the Jeffery car and the excellent service you render your patrons, that such letters fall into the class of all things that we have grown accustomed to and cause no comment. However, I felt that I could not close my six months' period of free inspection without expressing to you and through you to every member of your staff that I come in contact with, my great appreciation of the interest and attention that I received ALWAYS.

The car has given us the greatest satisfaction and this has been increased by the excellent service rendered since its purchase. F. W. STAHL.

To the Man Who Wants a "Four"

We say that the best car $1000 will buy is the Jeffery "Four." It is a fact that of all cars sold at this price, there is not one which can match the Jeffery "Four" in flexibility, in power, in economy and durability, the grade of materials and quality of workmanship which enter its construction.

One thousand owners in Chicago will verify this. We are ready to demonstrate it to you at any time.

NOTE; Over two thousand six hundred second-hand automobiles have been advertised for sale in the last three issues of the Sunday Tribune, but in all this vast number the only Jeffery cars were three we offered ourselves. We have today a waiting list for second-hand Jeffery cars.

INDIANA SOCIETY OBSERVES ITSELF IN THE MOVIES

George Ade Presented with the Goat, Emblematic of Presidency.

The Hon. Wilbur D. Nesbit, chief justice of the supreme court of the Indiana society of Chicago, solemnly announced last night in the Blackstone hotel that a special decree of divorce was ordered by which the Royal Hoosier Goat was taken from Edward Rector, retiring president, and awarded to George Ade, the new president. Whereupon Col. George Tracy Buckingham, lord high keeper of the Royal Hoosier Goat, who is charged with the rights, powers, and privileges of foraging for and providing for the goat, maintaining its quarters and insuring valet and funereal service for the goat, presented the sacred animal to the hoosier humorist.

By citation of the supreme court of the society, all members, their families, and friends, were summoned to attend the session when new officers were installed and a banquet was spread. Dancing followed Chief Justice Nesbit's doming of the ermine.

Old Stuff, George.

George Ade had the announcement, of real interest to breeders, dairymen, and men of commerce, that a new breed of honey cow had been produced on Hazelden farm, at Brook, Ind., which produces "milk punch." Heretofore members of the society have had to be content with customary punch, which was present last night, but was served in novel manner, from "the old maple tree" with iron pails and tin dippers. For those who did not care for the punch "ye olde towne pumpe" was provided.

Ade's new Jersey made a profound impression on the Indiana scientists, but even less than that aroused by three of his dairy maids whom he brought from his farm.

The Town Movies.

The titles of the pictures of last evening's entertainment were:

1. The Terre Haute Tango, as Interpreted by Mlle. Ernestine Myers.
2. Life on George Ade's Farm—How the Merry Milkmaids Make Duty One Long Musical Comedy.
3. Convening of the Supreme Court of the Indiana Society—Court Crier Noyes in a Noiseless Move.
4. The Chief Justice Asks for the Royal Goat and Is Told That Rector Insists on Keeping It.
5. The Court Executioner Ordered to Bring In Rector and Get His Goat.
6. Rector Desperately Clings to His Nanny and Refuses to be Separated—Chief Justice Nesbit Decrees a Goat Divorce.
7. Moved by the Sorrow of Rector, the Court Allows Him to Retain a Souvenir of His Goat.
8. Why John T. McCutcheon Could Not Get By the Censor at Salonika—Saloniki—Saleem O—Sal—Pronounce It Yourself, but Watch the Fillum.

ROBBERS BIND MEN AND GIRLS

Fifty Employes in Factory Unaware of Raid by Masked Gunmen.

$460 PAY ROLL GONE.

Two armed robbers, wearing stocking cap masks like the one worn by "Eddie" Mack in the holdup of the Washington Park National bank, bound the hands and feet of the president, vice president, and two women stenographers of Leonard Peterson & Co., 1234 Fullerton avenue, woodturners, shortly before noon yesterday, and escaped in a black automobile with the pay roll of $460 and a gold watch.

Fifty other employes in various sections of the plant were unaware of the holdup until after the bandits had sped away in the automobile, which was left half a block down the street.

The robbers used wire to bind the hands and feet of Leonard Peterson, president of the company; Oscar Lethander, the vice president, and Miss Mildred Kretzman and Miss Bessie Townsend, both stenographers.

"I had just returned from the bank with the money," said Mr. Peterson. "I had stepped into my office and just placed the satchel on my desk and sat down when the two bandits rushed in.

"Mr. Lethander, the vice president, and Miss Kretzman and Miss Townsend were in the office.

Women Screamed.

"One of the bandits trained his revolver on them and the robbers forced the four of us to walk into an adjacent room. They pulled coils of wire out of their pockets then and began tying us up. We weren't gagged, but we were given to understand that we had better not make any outcry. The women screamed, and the bandits told them to keep still or they'd be riddled.

"When they got my watch they backed into the street with the satchel containing the pay roll. We called out for help and managed to attract some of the other employés, who freed our hands and feet and sent calls for the police."

AMATEUR BANDIT IS FINED.

Frank Clark, 21 years old, came to Chicago from Denver to become a highwayman, he told Judge Robinson in the Hyde Park court yesterday, but his nerve failed him twice, he said. He was arraigned on a charge of carrying concealed weapons and was fined $100 and costs.

ORPET TRIAL LATE IN MAY.

William H. Orpet, accused of the murder of Marion Lambert of Lake Forest, may not be tried until late in May. His attorneys pressed their plea for a continuance and for a change of venue to McHenry county. State's Attorney Dady said he would not oppose a motion for a short continuance nor a change to McHenry county. There is no jury call in that county until May 28.

OLD KING WINTER, TOO, PUTS HAT BACK IN RING.

Snowstorms Hit Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Whole Northern Atlantic Coast.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 8.—Dreams of the spring poet and the early robin were torpedoed without warning today when winter centered in an active campaign on Indiana in the form of a general snowstorm. Reports to the United States weather bureau stated that the snow was general over the state.

Heaviest Snow of Year.

Altoona, Pa., April 8.—The heaviest snowstorm of the year has been raging here since early this morning, and up to 11 o'clock between eight and ten inches of snow has fallen. So far the Pennsylvania railroad is experiencing no delay, but street car traffic is badly crippled.

Coast Has Slushy Time.

New York, April 8.—From Washington to New England the Atlantic coast was being swept by an April snowstorm today that made the pre-Easter millinery business poor and converted city streets into puddles of slush. The weather man said he thought it would clear off for Sunday.

SHIPPING CLERK BEATEN FOR REFUSING TO STRIKE.

Five Hundred Employes of Mechanical Rubber Company Walk Out When Demands Are Not Met.

Joseph Blanchard, a shipping clerk in the plant of the Mechanical Rubber company, 2627 West Grand avenue, was beaten yesterday when he refused to join workers in the plant who went out on strike when refused an increase in pay.

Police reserves from the West Chicago avenue station were hurried to the scene and kept on duty to prevent further violence.

Five hundred employés of the plant walked out, demanding their pay be increased from 20 to 22½ cents an hour. August Kornegel, superintendent of the plant, said the men in the mill department asked for a raise and he granted it. Since then the men from other departments have also asked raises, but he has been without authority to act. He says the men refused to wait until he could communicate with the New York office.

Injured While Wing Dies.

Rocco Mattasco, 44 years old, 744 De Koven street, a street sweeper, died in the Columbus extension hospital yesterday. He was injured Friday afternoon when he was struck by an automobile at West Fourteenth and Solon streets. The automobile was driven by Louis Rosen of the Rosen Teaming company.

POLICE HUNT HUSBAND OF MURDERED WOMAN.

Suspect Love Affair Is Cause of Shooting Which Occurred Friday in Saloon.

Following the murder of Mrs. Helen Muscarello Friday night in front of the saloon of Joseph Sullo, 445 Division street, detectives have been hot on the trail of John Muscarello, her husband, in the belief that a love affair is at the bottom of the murder.

Joseph Jarectine, 1657 West Division street, said to have been a suitor of Mrs. Muscarello, who had left her husband, also is sought by the police. So are the three men who were seen with the woman a few moments before her murder.

John Retzer and Josephine, his wife, were able to aid the police when they told of the family troubles of the Muscarellos. The woman had been much sought after and when she parted from her husband because of constant quarreling several suitors called upon her.

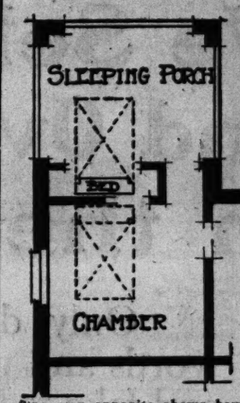
Murphy In-A-Dor Beds Make Sleeping Porches Practical

The day is coming when every home will have its sleeping porch—and every sleeping porch will have its Murphy In-A-Dor Bed.

Only by the use of the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed can a sleeping porch be used with entire satisfaction in all seasons and all weather.

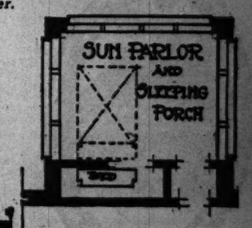
Only by the use of the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed can the most be gotten out of a sleeping porch every hour in the twenty-four.

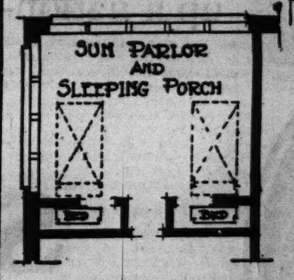
Study These Plans for House or Apartment



By means of this arrangement one may use the same Murphy In-A-Dor Bed in both bedroom and sleeping porch. The completely made-up bed may be shifted from either room to the other in less than a minute. It is such a simple, easy operation that a woman or child can do it without straining. On an instant's notice the bed may be moved inside out of the way of the hot sun of a summer morning or the snow of a winter blizzard. If desired, the bed may be left in the closet during the day, making the chamber as well as the sleeping porch available for other uses. It is also possible to use the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed on the porch only—keeping an ordinary bed in the chamber.

The plan opposite shows how a sun parlor may be converted at night into an ideal sleeping porch with a standard, full-sized bed. A Murphy In-A-Dor Bed secreted in an ordinary narrow door closet beside your sun parlor more than doubles its usefulness.





Here is an illustration of the use of two Murphy In-A-Dor Beds on a sun parlor-sleeping porch.

Only by using the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed can one really sleep outdoors, yet jump into a bed that is dry, warm and well aired.

Remember that the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed is as comfortable as the best bed made, uses ordinary mattresses and bedding, and keeps them aired all day.

Here Are Some Other Facts About Murphy In-A-Dor Beds

—the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed is the only concealed bed that is mechanically perfect. It does NOT get out of order.

—the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed is really and truly CONCEALED behind an ordinary narrow door, just like any other door.

—it is MORE ECONOMICAL TO FURNISH an apartment equipped with Murphy In-A-Dor Beds.

—it is LESS WORK TO CARE FOR an apartment equipped with Murphy In-A-Dor Beds.

—each Murphy In-A-Dor Bed means an extra room without the expense of building it.

—the Murphy In-A-Dor Bed is VASTLY superior to any substitute—causes tenants to RENEW their leases and keeps buildings full.

CITY OFFICIALS JUBILANT OVER SAVING ON MILK

Dr. Robertson Points Out 8 Cent Price Means $10,000 to Consumers Daily.

FARMERS PARADE IN GLEE.

Aftermath of the milk war centered about the city hall yesterday, where Dr. John Dill Robertson was in a congratulatory mood over the success he has achieved in the settlement of the battle between the farmers and the dealers.

Dr. Robertson pointed out where he had saved the city more than $10,000 a day in obtaining an agreement whereby the price will remain 8 cents a quart instead of 9, which had been threatened.

Farmers March in Glee.

There was also glee among the farmers and a parade of more than 150 marched in Barrington, led by the band of the Barrington High school.

But the real satisfaction, according to Dr. Robertson, lies in the fact that milk will remain at 8 cents.

"The Ira J. Mix company has threatened to raise the price to 9 cents," said Dr. Robertson, "but that is up to the people. If the people want to pay 9 cents when they can get milk for 8 cents it is their own fault."

Mayor Praises Robertson.

Mayor Thompson said Dr. Robertson was the greatest health commissioner the city ever had.

Among the developments of the day was one of threatened federal inquiry into an alleged conspiracy of farmers against the Bowman company. It was alleged by the company's attorneys that the fight to prevent the delivery of milk by independent producers was contrary to the Sherman law.

The Bowman depot and storehouse at Mokena was partially destroyed in a mysterious fire early in the day. The fire was discovered a short time after farmers and officials of the dairy company had settled their strike differences. The damage is estimated at $10,000.

NORTH SIDE NEWS

Written by Melbert L. Staley, the Newsboy at Clark and Belmont.

Miss Kathryn Helen Muencher, 7068 North Ashland avenue, a popular Rogers Park belle, startled her many friends by her elopement last Tuesday with D'art Ridge of the Foto-Player Co. Her parents upon receiving a Telegram Tuesday night at nine o'clock quietly accepted the step their only daughter had taken. Yesterday "the other fellow" another of her many admirers called up on the phone to request the privilege of taking Miss Muencher to a performance given by Lane High School.

Her mother answered the phone. "Kathryn is married," she said, "yes, I'm as surprised as you are. She left the house Tuesday noon, saying she was going to meet Mr. Ridge down town to give him some music. So I thought nothing of it when she took her suit-case. In place of music the she had filled it with her best clothes."

D'art Ridge recently of San Francisco California is with the Foto-Player Co. of Chicago, as demonstrater and instructor. Mrs. Muencher received a letter from her son in law begging forgiveness for stealing her daughter so abruptly.

"I loved your daughter so," he said. "We shall be on our honeymoon for a week."

Tears started to Mrs. Muenchers eyes for as she smiled thru her tears she said "I feel that altho I have lost my daughter I have gained a son.

It was a long block to 334 Wellington but they take two TRIBUNES every morning. The morning paper boy was quirious about the "two TRIBUNES."

"Of course its not a mysterey explained the morning paper boy to Mrs. Wilheim over the phone, "but I would like to know way you take two TRIBUNES?"

"No mystery at all," agreed Mrs. Wilheim. "I read one home and Mr. Wilheim takes the other to the office."

Fire destroyed the entire third floor flat Henry Hamburg 3247 Seminary av. yesterday morning. The High wind blowing the lighted gas unto wearing apparel hanging near is the only explanation Mr. Hamburg could give. While the fireman were at work it took several officers to prevent Mr. Hamburg who is fifty years old from entering the burning flat.

"But my money—my money" he repeated. The fire was discovered by A. Freedman a grocer across the street. In turning in the alarm he awoke Frank Hennesy an ex fireman living downstairs of the burning flat.

"Turn in the Alarm," some one yelled. Up jumped Hennesy, his fireman instinct aroused and he was out before he realized his clothes were behind. He returned and procured them.

'ROOF PROWLER' KILLED WIDOW, NEIGHBOR THINKS

Mrs. Agnes Middleton Had Many Man Friends, According to Witnesses.

SLAIN WITH GRATE SHAKER?

While Gustave Deutschmann, the old little wisp of a church choir fiddler was pichocheting from his cell to the barber's, the lieutenant's office and the postal box yesterday, clews of first water importance, although lacking finality in themselves were turned up bearing on the mysterious murder of Mrs. Agnes Middleton in "frivolous flat" at 3267 Armitage avenue.

The possibility that Mrs. Middleton was murdered solely for a robbery motive was strengthened by the statement of Dr. George W. Reis, whose office and residence is at Armitage avenue and Sawyer street, within a few steps of the modiste's shop, that he had discovered a "roof prowler" near his office two weeks ago, and had frightened him away with a gun.

Woman of Pleasure.

Mrs. Middleton's character as a woman pleasure bent was definitely established by the confessions of William H. Clarke of 670 North Dearborn street, a piano salesman, and Harry Erwin of 4843 Dorchester avenue that they had been intimate with her on numerous occasions.

Their statements to Capt. Meagher of the West North avenue police substantiate the report of many neighbors, men and women, that Mrs. Middleton was a woman of inviting demeanor who entertained a large man calling list without disturbing the peace of the vicinage.

What Doctor Saw.

A TRIBUNE reporter also learned from Dr. George W. Reis that the police had brought a cast iron grate shaker to his office during the day, to put it under a magnifying glass and determine whether the smear of blood and hair on one end was that of a human.

"I would not testify as an expert without examining the exhibit more closely," said Dr. Reis, "but the matted substance on the iron certainly appeared to me to be human blood and hair. I did not have a glass fitted to that sort of work, and we could not determine this absolutely."

The police refused to give out any information concerning the discovery of the third weapon, which has been connected with the inhuman murder of the modiste in her bedroom above her shop. It, or the hatchet, and the white handled razor are the instruments with which the murder was done, the police are satisfied.

Violinist Gives Biography.

Gustave Deutschmann, the little German violinist who roomed at Mrs. Middleton's flat, and who is charged with the murder, bared his whole past to Lieut. Joe Palczynski to show that an act of murder was out of consonance with his character. Deutschmann came up from his cell at his own request, a slight, nervous man, with a vague, not unpleasant blue eye, under yellow eyebrows most remarkably luxuriant and tangled.

"I want to say," he began in a mild, small voice, richly accented with German, "that Mrs. Middleton left the flat door from the street open at night for the last two months. I spoke of it to her and she expressed surprise, but never was it closed. When I see Erwin sitting in the dining room kissing her, when I see Clarke kissing her, I conclude that maybe she leave that door open to let them come up after all the house is dark.

"It is just my misfortune that I roomed there and that people think I am odd. That was why I was accused of this murder. But I will prove I am good and that I never did the crime."

Noise on Roof.

Then Deutschmann unfolded a stretch of his past life which illuminated one point which has lodged a strong suspicion against him—namely: his failure to hear an intruder cross over the roof near his window or to hear any sounds of a struggle. In doing so Deutschmann confessed to a series of strange mental struggles and six cranial operations which have unsettled his nervous system.

Deutschmann explained that he was stone deaf in one ear and slept with the other on the pillow.

"That is why I didn't hear a struggle nor any one pass over the roof," he said. "I didn't even hear the shot that killed John Middleton when he ended his life in 1914 in the very room I now occupy. It was only when Mrs. Middleton rushed to my room and said, 'I heard a shot in my husband's room; come in; I think he has killed himself'—it was only then I knew of the tragedy."

Born in Russia.

After saying that he was born 35 years ago in Russia of German parentage, Deutschmann told of coming to America and taking up the study of music.

"I worked in several piano stores and factories where musical instruments were made," he said. "Then in 1900 came the first of these strange attacks, affecting my ear. I was operated on. After I was discharged from the hospital I became a prey to violent headaches, which were almost maddening. I always was slight, and to keep up the fight was almost more than my strength was able."

Showing a remarkable memory for names and dates, Deutschmann then told of the five operations that followed between the first in 1900 and including the last in 1911. The last, he said, gave him the severest of mental as well as physical tortures. At recollection of it he burst into tears.

"I was nearly dead. I thought I was dead and that my soul had separated from my body. It seemed that I just hovered near my body, but was cut off forever from the people and the world. When I recovered the headaches didn't come back again, but I have been deaf in one ear since."

Man from Egypt?

Lieut. Palczynski at the conclusion of Deutschmann's story questioned him closely to learn if he ever suspected the existence of another ego in his personality, of whose actions the present incumbent had no knowledge.

"No," he laughed—a wide, straight, humorous mouth he has—"I always knew who I was and what I was doing even when I was the most sick."

Deutschmann expressed the firmest confidence that he would be released and that his marriage to his fiancée, Miss Mollie Nelson of 1907 Richmond street, would not be postponed again.

The theory of an outside murder, which is believed in almost unanimously by the neighbors of Mrs. Middleton, has the basic foundation that the woman's room was almost as accessible as if all doors were open. The broad, flat, stucco roof could be reached without effort by a person walking in from the alley up the back stairs seven steps, and putting a leg up from the stairway balustrade.

Mrs. Middleton's room was so small that there was scarcely room for other furniture than her bed in it, and she always slept with her window open. A person coming over the roof could let himself into the small well produced by haphazard architecture and step through the window into the murder room without trouble.

It is evident from the fact that Mrs. Middleton's room was locked from the inside that this is the way the slayer came, or if he was admitted by the bedroom door this was the route of his flight.

Slayer Seen by Collector?

William Bjurstrom of 1823 North Kedzie avenue, who owned the property occupied by Mrs. Middleton last night told a TRIBUNE reporter of collecting the rent from the woman the night she was murdered.

"I went in and she called out cheerfully to me in the manner she took with all men, 'Hello, come for the rent, I suppose?' There was another man in the shop at the time, and I presumed he was a customer. So I said, 'Yes, but go ahead and wait on the customer.' She laughed and answered, 'Never mind, I'll make out your check now.'

"I would know that man again if I saw him, I think, although I didn't take particular notice of him then."

Bjurstrom later went to the police station and looked at Erwin, but declared he was not the man.

The heroic appeal engendered in the suicide of Dr. Theodore B. Sachs awoke a strain of emulation in two young Jews and both, after writing long dissertations justifying suicide, in one of which Dr Sachs' example was specifically set out, ended their own lives with gas.

HERMAN B. KATANICK, 20 years old, of Indianapolis, a student in the University of Chicago, who lived at 4318 Ellis avenue, took his life Friday night. His letter was discovered yesterday.

A. SHAPIRO, 24 years old, ended his life in the house of Louis Orenstein, 1420 West Thirteenth street, last night. Shapiro's last written word was a philosophical treatise upon death and suicide.

Due to Wave of Hero Worship.

"There is no doubt," said Dr. W. H. Burmeister, coroner's physician, "that these young men were imbued with an idea of heroics brought about by the wave of hero worship for the self-sacrifice of Dr. Sachs."

Katanick, after referring to the death of Dr. Sachs and writing an analysis of his feelings before death, took gas. The letter he left in part follows:

"I daresay that any one who persistently contradicts or violates the prevailing modes of thought or canons of behavior or any accepted values is under suspicion of mental abnormality. I wish to assert as emphatically as I can that I am in full possession of all my faculties, moral, mental, physical, etc., ad infinitum; that in particular I am not suffering from an aberration of the intellect, and that I am fully aware of the action I am about to take.

Real Aristocrat Fearless of Death.

"The real aristocrat (whether or not he is what Chesterton says he is not, the man with the tallest figure and the shortest epigram) not necessarily the devoted Nietzscheite, is under no delusions as to the exact value of life; the veriest peasant of Andalusia possesses it in common with Le duc de Guise: it is only the stolid, stupid, obsequious bourgeois that, fearing its own shadow, has conjured this bugaboo of death. I suppose it is not often that anyone can sit calmly and contemplate the approach of his last moments.

Never Feared Death.

"While my present resolve is perhaps of sudden genesis, I have never feared death. There are two classes who defy and spurn the inexorable reaper (I decline to capitalize it). The scientist who believes that death is nothing but the dissolution of the natural elements and their reabsorption into nature fears it not—for him intimacy brings contempt. The aristocrat laughs at death because he must justify his privileged position in society, and since the ordinary man fears death more than anything else the aristo-

HOYNE'S ANARCHIST PLOT DOUBTED BY U. S. SLEUTHS.

Federal Secret Service Men Say They Are in Touch with Direct Actionists in America.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—Secret service operatives and department of justice officials were inclined to scoff at the story told by a Chicago anarchist to State's Attorney Hoyne that he is a member of a country-wide association that has been plotting assassination of all of the crowned heads of Europe.

Secret agents hee said they knew practically every anarchist in the United States, and his habitat as well. Since the war started, they said, a special system of espionage on these men and women has been put in operation. They believe it impossible that more than two or three had organized such a wholesale assassination plot without it being known.

"We fear only the individuals who go after big men," said an official tonight. "We believe we could get any gang that starts working. Here in America the individuals are assassins. The 'gang stories' are figments of their own brains or grow out of their acts. They are seldom found true.

Boy Slayers Get 14 Years.

Charles M. Witham and Joseph F. Marek, boy slayers of Joseph Osborne, a "hermit," were sentenced to fourteen years each in the penitentiary by Judge Thomsen yesterday.

ERBSTEIN AND O'DONNELL CASES SET FOR FRIDAY.

Berger Attack on Lawyers Before Grand Jury Cited in Affidavits Before Judge Turney.

Judge Turney yesterday set next Friday for testimony and argument on the motion to quash the indictment against Attorneys Charles Erbstein and Patrick H. O'Donnell. Affidavits were presented to the judge attesting to the fact that in obtaining the indictments Assistant State's Attorney Berger told the grand jury the two lawyers have been in trouble before, that they have put up crooked defenses for years, and that the prosecutor's office wishes to run them out of town.

Members of the grand jury which brought the indictments have been subpoenaed to tell of the proceedings leading to the true bills, Attorney John J. Healy of counsel for the defendants said last night.

According to Mr. Healy, even if the indictment is quashed the state's attorney may bring another if he can. The lawyers are charged with subornation of perjury.

Father Wins Pardon for Son.

Gov. Dunne yesterday commuted the sentence of Ira McMullen, sentenced last December by Municipal Judge Heap to serve six months in the bridewell for stealing an overcoat, to end immediately. Judge Heap recommended the commutation upon the pleading of McMullen's father and the son's promise to reform.

PRISONERS LABOR FOR CAPTORS.
Trainloads of Bulgarian prisoners arriving at a railway station near Saloniki, Greece, were seized upon immediately by their captors and given a job loading flour. Under the steady vigilance of the men who directed them they proved that fighting was not their only accomplishment.

"He says virtually: 'You are not to rule—you fear death. I play with it—ergo, I am entitled to rule.' It would take me too far astray to discuss how just the immortal Twain was when he declared that the aristocrat in turn was invested by yards of colored ribbons as the price of his services, but then I am merely following the great and noble men who have preceded me—Socrates, Chatterton, and, slightly more recently, Dr. Sachs."

Five Jews Kill Selves.

Three other Jews who took their lives were reported yesterday.

Harry Berlin, who came to Chicago from Baltimore three weeks ago, committed suicide by shooting himself in the home of Mrs. Rose Lettbein, 2516 Cortez street. Mrs. Lettbein told the police that he had not worked for a week.

Grief over the death of his wife two weeks ago is believed to have caused the suicide of Henry Statzriem, 72 years old, owner of a saloon at 2508 Clybourn avenue.

Morris Williams, owner of a small cigar factory at 4620 Cottage Grove avenue, was found dead on the floor of his kitchen at 4828 Prairie avenue. Six burners of the gas range were open. He is believed to have taken his life while despondent because of illness. Mrs. Fred Ascher, who lives in the flat above, smelled gas and called the police.

SCHUMANN-HEINK TOLD OF PLOT TO ROB HOME.

Opera Singer Gets Letter from Man Who Overheard Conversation of Two Planning Raid.

Mme. Schumann-Heink, the grand opera singer, received a letter yesterday from Adele Gottsliben of 5126 Sheridan road, saying the latter had overheard two men talking of robbing the prima donna's home.

The letter was addressed "To the occupant of the red brick house at the northwest corner of Thirty-seventh street and Michigan avenue," and read as follows:

"This morning at the Northwestern depot I overheard an unusual conversation. Of course it may have been idle gossip, but I feel it my duty as a Christian to advise you of it. Two men were planning how they could loot your house. One thought he had every reason to believe they could get a good haul. I have not the time to go into details. If you wish to know more return answer with messenger. Sincerely, ADELE GOTSLIBEN,
"5126 Sheridan road."

Mme. Schuman-Heink notified the police, but said she believed the writer of the letter was interested in music and wished an interview, so took that method of getting one.

Child Playing Marbles in Front of Home in Austin Slips and Falls Under Coal Wagon.

Two children, a boy and a girl, were killed in Austin last night, one by being run over by a coal wagon and the other by being struck by an automobile truck. Drivers of both vehicles are being held.

Robert Judson, 7 years old, of 729 North Leamington avenue, was playing in front of his home when he slipped and fell under a coal wagon owned and driven by Edward H. Jolitz, 5119 West Chicago avenue.

Grace Aiken, 8 years old, of 1030 North Central avenue was struck by the fender of an automobile truck owned by C. Meschler, 5006 West Chicago avenue, and driven by Charles Rich, 5014 West Superior street.

Contractor Jordan, Indicted on Charge with Girl, Writing "Third Edition of Bible."

Waukegan, Ill., April 8.—[Special.]—H. Jordan, the Chicago contractor, who was arrested on complaint of his wife, and held to the grand jury after she had discovered him keeping house at Lake Forest with May Bruder, is spending his time in the Lake county jail writing what he calls the "third edition of the Bible."

He seems very much interested in his work and prisoners declare he works all the time on his task.

Miss Bruder was released late on Friday when a gray haired woman, her mother, applied at the sheriff's office and after searching the folds of her dress produced the $100 necessary for her daughter's bonds.

INTERNATIONAL ROMANCE

Miss Vera Arkwright

Fred Bate

It was four years ago when Frederick Bate, Chicago artist, informed his wife he proposed to travel in Spain to further the development of his artistic talent. Mrs. Bate, who was Miss Sally Plows, daughter of the candy man, assented. He went—alone—and in 1914 Mrs. Bate secured a divorce, alleging she had heard nothing but silence from her husband for a year. Later she married Hugh Makie Gordon Garden, architect.

Now from London comes the announcement of Mr. Bate's engagement to Miss Vera Nina Arkwright, daughter of the late Capt. F. W. Arkwright of the Coldstream guards. Miss Arkwright, who has lately been serving on the staff of the American hospital in Paris, is also of royal descent. Her mother, Mrs. Fitz George, is the widow of Col. Fitz George, eldest son of the late Duke of Cambridge, who was a cousin of the late Queen Victoria.

Mr. Bate is a graduate of McKinley High school and began his art study at the Art institute. At one time he was connected with the publicity department of Riverview park. An aunt, Mrs. F. E. Bate, lives at 2153 West Jackson boulevard. Shortly after the war began he entered the British ambulance service.

RACES MEET AT MARSEILLES TO DEFEND FRANCE

War Activities More Noticeable in South than in Paris Itself.

BY PHILIP KERBY.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENT OF THE TRIBUNE.]

MARSEILLES, March 16.—Despite the brilliantly illuminated streets and gay, jostling, heterogeneous crowds that throng them at all hours, one feels much closer to the fighting line here than in Paris.

A seemingly interminable stream of rumbling munition carts, with perspiring British Tommies swearing profusely at their tired mounts; squads of German prisoners under guard; two rollicking "Hieland" pipers playing a skirl on the bagpipes, accompanied by a squat Senegalese on a mournful lute, to an admiring audience of little brown Gurkhas.

Tall, stalwart, turbaned Indians, and slant eyed Tonkinese; a tired little mother clothed in rags and followed by a nondescript brood of young ones, each hungrily munching a crust of bread—Montenegrin refugees recently arrived; all the weird phantasmagoria of the war passes down the Cannebier, or main street.

Prejudices Broken Down.

"For the east is east and the west is west, and never the twain shall meet," no longer holds true. A national calamity has broken down the century old barriers of distrust and misunderstanding.

The mother country knows and appreciates the loyalty and self-sacrifice of her distant possessions, while the colonies in their turn have come to realize the difficulties and racial prejudices suffered by those "at home." Parent and child, drawn together by a mutual need, have met on a common footing for the first time, and the meeting place has been Marseilles.

Familiar ocean liners, now transformed into gray transports, lie at anchor in the harbor, awaiting an opportunity to engulf the miniature skyscrapers of munitions standing on the wharves, or to discharge their precious cargo of human freight.

Apparent Chaos on Docks.

Along the miles of docks apparent chaos reigns. The casual spectators sees nothing beyond the huge traveling steel cranes, whining complainingly under a too heavy load, and the stevedores and longshoremen (their kakhi or blue jumpers the only sign that they are soldiers).

A diminutive little man, little more than a boy, as his embryo mustache testifies, sitting quietly on a bale of hay, is the master mind directing the whole operation. The bale of hay is his headquarters, where he issues instructions, not through telephone, as on the firing line, but through the medium of a tall, red faced sergeant with a decided brogue. This was a quiet oasis in the center of a roaring bedlam.

Becomes a Routine Task.

"Oh, no, we're not very busy today," he replied in answer to my exclamation of wonder at the efficiency to be found on all sides. "You should have seen us when the boys were 'junketing' off to Saloniki. Then we in the Army Service corps were a bit pushed.

"Today and every day for the past week we have only been loading detail shipments. After a while it gets to be pretty much of a routine job, and a thankless one at that, especially when the 'C. O.' (commanding officer's) luggage goes astray."

I asked if the recent activity of the enemy's submarines off Marseilles had hindered to any appreciable extent the transportation of troops and munitions.

"That's not in our line, so I can't say," he replied. "As soon as a boat slips its moorings our responsibility ceases and we leave the rest to those chaps over there. And a jolly fine lot they are, too," he said, pointing to a knot of French sailors awaiting a tender to take them aboard one of the gray, snakelike torpedo destroyers lying in the outer harbor with steam up.

Here was a lieutenant, certainly not over twenty-five, in command of from eight hundred to a thousand men, accepting his responsibility and doing his bit with a quiet efficiency which a man twice his age might have envied. He was just another "find" of the war.

Marseilles might also be termed the city of mystery. One feels the tenseness of the battle fronts, which is accounted for by the three camps situated just outside the city.

Sometimes these camps are teeming with men, horses, munitions, and their campfires at night make a glow in the sky; then suddenly the order comes and the camp so recently filled to capacity is empty of everything before dawn, the pacing sentries the only testimony of its recent tenancy.

All day and all night the trains rumble past, whistling shrilly as they leave on their journey toward the unknown destination. They are the land battleships traveling under sealed orders.

STREET CAR RECEIVERSHIP UNLESS STRIKE IS SETTLED.

Federal Judge in Toledo, O., to Act if Service Is Not Resumed by Tomorrow Morning.

Toledo, O., April 8.—Unless Toledo's cars are running by 9 a. m. on Monday the Toledo Railways and Light company will be placed in the hands of a receiver. This announcement was made by Federal Judge Killits today, following the hearing on the application of the city for a receivership for the company. City cars have been tied up since March 28, when conductors and motormen, who had organized a union, were ordered to bring in the cars or take off their union buttons.

The "Barefoot" Tire—
—and Why.

WHEN you take your Shoes off tonight do this:
—Bear your weight on your right Foot and, without lifting it off the floor, press it forward and backward firmly.

Then observe that only the bony and muscular Structure of your Foot moves forward and backward, while its Sole stays fixed on the floor.

That demonstrates the rolling motion of flesh and muscle, the elastic Cushion quality which reduces friction in walking, and prevents slipping (backward, forward, or sideways).

It supplies that CLING quality, which gives Traction without Friction.

It protects the Bones and Sinews of the Foot against the Wear and Tear of action, as a lubricant protects Metal moving parts, while providing the wonderful "Barefoot" hold on slippery surfaces.

That ROLLING MOTION, then, is the ideal aimed at in this Clingy, Springy, and Stretchy black "Barefoot" Rubber of 1916 Goodrich Tires.

CONSIDER now the means by which many Tires have been given maximum Traction,—i.e., by means of a "sand-papery" texture in the Rubber of their Anti-Skid Treads.

Every time the Brakes are put on, to make such Tires grip the road, the relatively hard, unyielding, and comparatively brittle, texture of the Rubber in their Treads causes these Treads to grind away on the pavement, to WEAR OUT fast at the point of contact.

The sudden efficiency of their grinding-Traction also tugs so sharply on the Rubber Adhesive between the layers of Fabric in Tire as to separate these layers.

There is little "give" to them—just as there is little "slide" to them.

So, they gain Traction at the expense of Mileage.

Naturally such Tires require a great BULK of such Rubber in order to deliver reasonable Mileage before worn out.

And, therein they differ radically from GOODRICH "Barefoot" Tires.

Because,—the Safety-Tread on Goodrich Tires is made of "Barefoot-Rubber," a new, and exclusive compound which discards all unnecessary whitish "frictional" ingredients that are heaviest and inert, as proved by its lighter weight.

HERE is how it acts in Automobiling,—
—When the weight of the Car bears on this clinging "Barefoot-Rubber" Tread, and the power is applied to go ahead or reverse, the wonderful stretch in the "Barefoot" Rubber Sole (or Tread) of the Goodrich Tire acts as a sort of Lubricant between the Fabric Structure of the Tire and the Road.

Then, the Barefoot-Rubber "Toes," of the Goodrich Safety-Tread Tire, CLING to the pavement (instead of grinding against it), in such manner as your Bare Foot would cling to a slippery surface—without Grind, and so, with the minimum of Frictional Heat or Wear for maximum Traction.

Goodrich "Barefoot-Rubber" is now made into Goodrich FABRIC Tires,—Goodrich Silvertown Cord Tires,—Goodrich Inner Tubes,—Goodrich Truck Tires,—Goodrich Motor Cycle, and Bicycle, Tires, as well as into Goodrich Rubber Boots, Over-Shoes, Soles and Heels.

Get a Sliver of it from your nearest Goodrich Branch, or Dealer. Stretch it thousands of times, but break it you can't.

That's the Stuff that GOODRICH Black-Tread Tires are made of.

REO

Every Day Counts Now!

DO YOU REALIZE how near the spring rush is—the spring demand for automobiles?

AND THAT THERE WON'T BE—can't be—enough Reos to go 'round?

YOU RECALL OF COURSE that never since the first Reo was made and sold has it been possible for us to make enough cars to supply all who wanted Reos—never a time.

AND DO YOU KNOW that the demand for Reo Sixes threatens to be hopelessly in excess of the possible supply?

WHY, WE STARTED APRIL with more orders for immediate delivery than ever were on hand at any previous time in the history of Reo.

SIMPLY WONDERFUL—the popularity of the New Reo Six!

AND NO WONDER when you consider the matchless value buyers obtain in this Six—this great, big, beautiful 7-passenger Six at $1250!

IT ISN'T THE PRICE ALONE—though, who could have hoped a year or two ago, ever to obtain such a magnificent equipage for so modest a sum—a price we then considered cheap for a skimpy five-passenger car.

NOT ALONE THAT FOR $1250 you can buy this beautiful Six, but the fact that its operation and maintenance cost have also proved to be so low as to be well within your reach.

IF YOU COULD AFFORD to own and to drive a five-passenger car then—say of 110 inch wheel-base—you can better afford to own this 126 inch, 45 horse power Reo Six now—for the cost of upkeep is less—almost unbelievably less.

DO YOU KNOW our dealers tell us that many families who really need a seven-passenger car hesitate because they think they could not afford such a "great big" automobile?

AND YET THOSE same families are driving now, five passenger cars that cost vastly more per mile to drive and more per year to maintain.

YOU SEE FEW realize what tremendous strides have been made in the direction of low maintenance cost. Few appreciate the gasolene economy and above all the stability of cars made nowadays.

THEY STILL HAVE IN MIND those former days and those former cars that only a millionaire could afford to own.

WHY WE REO FOLK NEVER WOULD have built this Six but for the fact that we knew it would be within the means of tens of thousands who formerly paid a similar price for a smaller car—and paid ten times more for operation and maintenance.

IF YOU WERE TO ASK US what has been the greatest accomplishment of automobile manufacturers in recent years, we'd say, the placing of such a luxurious equipage as this in the hands of the million at a price formerly paid for two-cylinder cars and of such quality that those same users can better afford to own it.

CONSIDER THIS: the annual deterioration of this Reo Six has proved to be less than 10%! Hundreds of buyers tell us they have paid not one cent for repairs since owning their car. And our records show that the average cost of replacement parts is less than six dollars per car per year.

SO IF THAT'S ALL that makes you hesitate to place your order, you need hesitate no longer.

AND, NEED WE REPEAT, demand is tremendous. Only those who order immediately can hope to obtain Reo Sixes for spring delivery.

GIRL'S LETTERS BLAME DR. MASON IN DEATH CASE

Writings Found In "Frat" House Tell of Forced Marriage Plans.

Around the Chicago frat house of a medical fraternity there was a "character" in the person of a negro janitor who, when he had to sign his name, wrote it with a flourish: "H. L. Norman."

In the same fraternity house there resided Dr. Robert J. Mason, a student in Rush Medical college. In his pottering and pothering, the laughing negro kept his eyes wide open and wary.

Thus the same eyes chanced one day on two letters in Dr. Mason's possession. The letters were informative about a certain young Denver girl, called Miss Ruth Merriweather, and a Denver physician, by name Dr. Floyd W. Noble. The letters, too, seemed to signify Dr. Mason had promised to marry the girl.

The Plot Thickens.

Some little time after he had seen the letters the janitor read in the newspapers Miss Merriweather of Denver had died and Dr. Noble had been arrested. Then Dr. Mason was extradited from Chicago.

Dr. Noble was acquitted because, he testified, he had not treated her save to endeavor to preserve her life after she had brought herself to peril.

Then the negro janitor, alone and with furtiveness, sent a letter to the Denver district attorney. He did not sign the letter. He was giving information, and in consequence he was afraid.

The Denver district attorney sent the unsigned letter to Lieut. Thomas Sheehan of State's Attorney Hoyne's office. Sheehan and M. Blair Coan, an investigator, found the janitor. He confessed his information had come from letters which Dr. Mason possessed.

Lieut. Sheehan and Coan went after Dr. Mason and forced him to surrender the letters. Now Dr. Mason stands convicted in Denver of conspiracy in planning the events that caused the girl's death. And at his trial the letters were the prosecution's chief evidence.

Now for the Letters.

Here they are:

" Nov. 23, 1914.

"My Lover; Received your letter and Tea, dear, it is an awful strain on mother and myself, so we really have come to no satisfactory arrangement yet. If this had only been tended to a while back it would not be so serious now, but as it is there is just one chance in a hundred, but we will hope for the best any way.

"As far as dates are concerned that is impossible. We are absolutely bound to go another now, so it doesn't matter when happens. We have to marry in July, Mother and I both are depending on you for the one and only thing which is the right way.

Did She Hate Him?

"Dear, you said you supposed I hated you. Do you think for a moment I would do the thing which means death in some cases if I hated you? We could have forced you to come back and marry me, but I know you will keep your promise as the most sacred thing in the world.

"Your letter cheered me up wonderfully this a. m. Are you going to England? I wish to know, because when you start I will be rather bad, so mother will have to write for me. And I guess you will wish to know my condition; so let me know. Be a good boy, Bobbie, and think of me lots, because I love you. Yours, RUTH."

A Grand Doctor.

The second letter read:

" Nov. 25, 1914.

"Lover: Excuse this being written in pencil, but I'm writing it in bed. Dr. Noble treated me yesterday. Noble is certainly grand. He was out here from 3 until 9:30 yesterday, and then came at 10 last evening to see how I was. He came all of that distance just so he would not break his promise. Mother told me his wife had better be careful or she would lose him. He phoned this a. m. and asked how his girl was. He certainly has a stand in with this family.

"Poor dad is so anxious to see you, dear, and keeps talking about you. Dora tells every one who knows you how grand you are.

"Are you lonely, dear? Well, I think of you constantly, so if that helps you any you have that consolation.

"Mike was out last evening and asked about you. Remember last Thanksgiving, we went to the game? It will be quite a while before I shall be able to go out again.

"Mother doesn't dislike you, Bob. She knows it is a terrible thing, but if you do the right thing you will be excused by her, and, of course, if you take any other course, your conscience will hound you until you will live a hell on earth.

"You and I will be quite the happiest people on earth when we are married, because you have made me very, very happy in more ways than one. As long as it is not possible to come to me, will you fix it so I can have my engagement ring, dear, before you intended?

"Mother told Dora about the ring before this other trouble came up, so, of course, I wish her to think everything is as it should be. If it is not possible to buy it with the money you have, will you try and get some of your bills collected in order to buy it? I hate to ask you this, but, dear, I have gone through an awful lot for you, and so am going to ask this in return.

"Then I know I can go on getting my things ready, and while I'm sewing it will not seem quite so hard, because I shall know it is just to be more lovable and attractive to you. You do think I'm attractive, don't you, lover mine?

Of Mother Love.

"I wish you didn't have to go to England. Can't you stay right there in Chicago? Then I know I can hear from you. Otherwise, when you are so far from me it will take nearly a week to get my mail.

"You won't change, will you, when you get over the first effects of this trouble, or try to back out, even if you aren't missing me as much as you thought? Because even if you find you don't love me, anyway, we will have to marry, then let things adjust themselves.

"I couldn't do otherwise, because of my mother. She is the most wonderful thing in the world. The way she is sticking to you and me through this, and so we must both repay her and make her happy for always. She admitted she thought more of you than your own mother probably does. That is the reason this thing goes so hard with her. She is certainly crushed. If I recover all right, she will be a little relieved; so will I.

Longing Hearts.

"Eight months is an awfully long while to be away from you, dearest, but it may not be that long.

"If you are afraid of our engagement being announced when I receive my ring, and if you desire it not to be, never fear—it won't be. But just for our happiness and father's and mother's, and so we will know we are bound for always, it is best for me to have it right away.

"This is an awfully long letter isn't it? "Dr. Noble is charging quite a sum—$50—besides what I shall have to pay where I stay, because it can't be done here, on account of Dora. You know what I mean. I do not wish to write it too plainly.

"I guess maybe you will not hear from me again until after it is over.

"Well, darling, will close. I'm yours absolutely, in heart and body. In July will be yours as your wife. It's nice to think of it that way, dear; to think of you as my own husband. Much love.

"Yours, RUTH."

That is all.

U.S. Schwartz

This is one of those disappointing things in the newspaper game.

You'd think, wouldn't you, that when a young man ran for alderman and was elected and that when the University of Chicago gossips learned four days after election that one of their young women was engaged to the alderman—you'd think that there was a nice little romance. But Ulysses S. Schwartz, just elected alderman from the Third ward, merely said:

"I met Miss Swawite in a very conventional way—at a friend's home; and I was engaged to her before I even thought of running for office. No, there wasn't even a university angle—no campus romance or literary circle affection. It was just plain and simple."

Miss Marguerite Swawite took her Ph. B. degree with honors from the university in 1911 and her master's degree in English in 1915. Since last June she has been instructing elementary English courses. She is the daughter of Leon M. Swawite of 4057 Vincennes avenue.

ALL WHITE ELEPHANTS SOLD; SALE HAS TO CLOSE.

Sale Nets $16,000 for Children's Memorial Hospital—Whitest Elephant a White Dress.

The white elephant sale was anything but a white elephant. It was not supposed to close until next Tuesday, but last night the last article was sold, and for lack of a stock the sale had to come to an end. Mrs. J. T. Harahan estimated that in the four days $16,000 was taken in, all but a few hundred dollars of which is profit. The Children's Memorial hospital is the beneficiary.

The last article sold was a white lace dress. Whose it was, who bought it, and for how much will never be revealed. It was the whitest of all the white elephants.

"Will there be another white elephant sale next year?" Mrs. Harahan repeated. "O, don't mention next year. We're all worn out."

LEWIS' WARNING OF PERIL TO U. S. AROUSES SENATE

Hints Troops May Be Withdrawn from Mexico to Meet a Graver Crisis.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., April 8.—[Special.]—Senator Lewis of Illinois today took the senate to task for failing to hasten the passage of the Chamberlain army bill.

He asserted that the country is in a more precarious situation today than ever in its history and that the senate is dilly-dallying along just as though there was no trouble at all and none in sight. He startled his colleagues by saying there was foundation for the press dispatches that the administration was thinking of withdrawing troops from Mexico in order to meet a greater emergency.

Opposes Pork Measure.

He opposed the Underwood amendment providing for the construction of government aided nitrogen producing plants, and all other collateral propositions.

"Either we should surround our government at this time with forces sufficient to meet its exigencies," he said, "or announce to the country that we do not agree that such exigencies exist, and cease parleying with this question of preparation, and turn our attention to those other subjects which incidentally relate to national preparation for war and generally refer to the welfare of the farmer and the citizen.

Warns of Serious Condition.

"I view the situation at this particular time as precarious in the matter of diplomatic surroundings. Either we do not regard the condition as calling for the immediate action on our part, and have not the courage to say so, or we do so regard it and have not the statesmanship to act with that succinctness and immediateness for which the situation calls."

"FRAT" WITHOUT A LEADER IN OAK PARK SCHOOL WAR.

H. P. Magill Withdraws from Race for President of Board—States His Position.

The pro-fraternity element among the patrons of the Oak Park-River Forest High school district were left without a leader yesterday just before the school election opened. H. P. Magill of River Forest, candidate for president of the board against President J. K. Ingalls, withdrew from the race. In a letter to J. R. Preston of River Forest Mr. Magill made it clear that he is not in favor of but opposed to fraternities in high schools and that he would not be a candidate on a pro-fraternity platform.

It was accepted by both sides that the withdrawal of Mr. Magill allowed the pro-fraternity element's efforts to elect a ticket to collapse.

Gives $1,000 to Preachers' Fund.

A Chicago layman walked into Dr. C. A. Kelly's office at 830 Garland building yesterday and gave $1,000 to the retired Methodist preachers' fund of the Rock River conference. His name is withheld.

WEEKLY REVIEW of the WAR
by Capt. Henry J. Reilly

FRENCH FRONT.

During the week the Germans have made heavy attacks west of the Meuse, in the region of Avocourt, and also against Haucourt and Bethincourt. They finally captured Haucourt, east of the Meuse, and made considerable gain near Fort Douaument, advancing well into Caillette wood and occupying all of Vaux village.

In heavy counter attacks the French succeeded in regaining part of Caillette wood and part of Vaux village. Subsequent French counter attacks in the same region broke down. Later the Germans succeeded in occupying all French positions north of Forges brook, between Haucourt and Bethincourt, but failed in an attempt to occupy Bethincourt. The ast of the week the Germans captured French trenches over a mile of front south of Haucourt.

RUSSIAN FRONT.

There have been some local affairs at various parts of the line, but nothing of importance.

ITALIAN FRONT.

The Austro-Hungarian artillery has been subjecting the Italian positions to heavy fire. A few local attacks have been made by the Austro-Hungarian infantry with some small successes. The indications are that the Austro-Hungarians are about to begin a general attack on the Italians.

THE BALKANS.

The situation in the Balkans remains the same, the allies still holding Saloniki and Avlona and Roumania and Greece remaining neutral.

THE CAUCASUS.

There has been no news of importance during the last week from this theater of war. Apparently matters are more or less at a standstill all along the line.

MESOPOTAMIA.

Once more the British relief force has advanced to the aid of Gen. Townshend's force, still shut up in Kut-el-Amara. Gen. Lake, who commands the relief force, reports having captured the Turkish position of Umm-el-Henna. This position is said to be the strongest between him and Kut-el-Amara.

PERSIA.

Reports indicate the Russians are still occupying towns in Persia.

EGYPT.

There has been no news of importance the last week. The British are continuing their preparations to resist any attempted advance against the Suez canal.

SUMMARY.

The event of chief importance is still the German attack on Verdun. The last week has seen a steady continuation of their advance. The failure of the Russian offensive along the northern part of the eastern front relieves Germany, at least for the time being, of any apprehension in that quarter, and leaves her free to concentrate on the western front.

The continued failure of the British to make any general attack permits her to give undivided attention to Verdun. The failure of the Russian offensive in Galicia permits Austria-Hungary to concentrate her forces against Italy.

While it is too early to tell, the indications are that, for the first time since Italy entered the war, the Austro-Hungarians are going to abandon the defensive and attempt a general offensive against her. The present period of the war is undoubtedly the most critical since the battle of the Dunajec in Galicia, during the first days of May, 1915.

PADEREWSKI GIVES REPLY TO POLISH RELIEF CRITICS.

Pianist Who Is Leader in Work Says People Need Housing as Well as Food Supplies.

New York, April 8.—Ignace Jan Paderewski, the pianist and composer, who is at the head of the Polish war relief fund, declared in a statement made public here today that objections which have been raised to the solicitation of money for Polish sufferers "are more of a political than of a humanitarian nature."

Some persons had expressed doubt, he said, as to the usefulness of sending funds to a country where, according to report, "no more food can be obtained unless at exorbitant prices." Others objected on the ground that "nothing could reach the victim, everything being taken."

He admitted that food was held at an almost prohibitive price in Poland, but said "the question is whether we ought to save those numerous endangered lives or wait until the prices go down." Poland is asking for charity, he said, and not for practical advice.

"The public," said Paderewski, "ought to bear in mind that the needs of the population are not confined to food, but, owing to the complete destruction of nearly 20,000 villages, some shelter for the inhabitants must be provided."

PHONE RUSE HOLDS WOMAN WHILE ROBBER TAKES GEMS.

Tricked Wife of West Side Jeweler Loses Diamonds Valued at $1,600 to Thief.

A youthful robber walked out of the jewelry store of E. Battegey, 2932 West Madison street, yesterday afternoon with sixty-eight diamonds, valued at $1,600, while the wife of the jeweler was at the telephone.

Battegey had gone to the loop to make a deposit of money in his bank and had left his wife in charge. She said a young man, faultlessly dressed, entered and asked to look at some unset diamonds. She opened a safe and took out two trays of stones. The young man examined a few and then said he would have to call up a friend on the telephone.

"I told him to use my phone, which is on the second floor, where we live," said Mrs. Battegey. "He went upstairs and after telephoning came down again.

"In a minute or so the telephone rang and I laid the trays back on the shelf and went to answer. When I returned the diamonds were gone. The person on the telephone talked some nonsense that I wasn't able to understand."

The police said there was something gey was unable to give an adequate description of the robber.

VILLA FASTNESS ANOTHER TIBET OF DESOLATION

Mountains and Deserts Prove Hard Task Ahead of Americans in Their Hunt.

Some of the difficulties to be encountered by the American army in its pursuit of Bandit Villa are pictorialized in the rotogravure section of this issue of THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE. There are two pages of pictures depicting dizzy mountain trails, bridges, bleak valleys, deep canyons, etc. The photographs include a scene along the Mexican Northwestern railroad south of Madera in the Guerrero district, a canyon scene in the Sierra Madre mountains, a swinging bridge on Dolores trail, the heart of the Sierra Madre, where canyons are 3,000 feet deep, and other striking features illustrative of the title given the group of pictures, "Like Finding a Needle in a Haystack."

The territory in which the Americans are operating has been called "Villa's land of last resort." Three weeks ago one could have counted on his fingers the Americans who had penetrated into that heart of the Villista country.

None of the writers and adventurers who followed the bandit when his star was high had need to enter it. It was that land which he and they must yet have always visioned in the back of their minds for the inevitable time when his fortunes should turn.

It is a country of aborigines living in a squalor which none in Alaska or Siberia can match, where neither English nor American coinage is understood, and where, strangest of all, religion has not seemed to step in.

The dwellings, human faces, and farm implements of these cold uplands, where the trees are not yet in leaf, suggest most strongly those of a land like Tibet.

And then, in the manner that the oriental hordes of the dark ages must have swept primitive Europe, the American army was flung into the Mexican fastness. Aeroplanes, motor trucks, automobiles come into the primeval.

All the problems of pioneering rose in equality to the military ones.

A correspondent, writing from Pershing's base, says all the maps are wrong. An aviator, forced to land "somewhere" in the darkness, faces invisible beings, muttering, circling about him all night.

Nowhere in the Philippines, agree officers who have campaigned there, has the army been up against such odds. There it was recognized in the bottom of the rebels' hearts that the Americans were the inevitable masters; information could be secured; men might be bribed. But in Mexico all this is impossible. Clews fail, and informers vanish.

RESCUED GIN CASK HAS RECORD FOR EVAPORATION.

And the Janitors at the Federal Building Smile and Smile and Smile and Smile.

The Negro janitors in the federal building look at each other and smile. The elevator man suggests it's the bad man from Egypt. But nobody comes forward with a satisfactory explanation of the rapid disappearance of the liquid contents of a forty-five gallon cask of gin now stored in the fifteenth floor of the building.

"Must be evaporation," says Daniel J. Chapin, internal revenue agent.

When the Iowa sank several months ago two longshoremen rescued the cask and brought it in to Mr. Chapin. Since then the level of the gin has been going down at the rate of about three gallons a month. Mr. Chapin hopes he can get an appropriation to auction it off. Otherwise he may have to shift the cask to the basement, away from the janitors' quarters.

TURN DOWN CANAL PROJECT.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—The army engineers today reported adversely on the construction of a water way from Lake Superior to the Mississippi river by way of Allouez bay and the Amicon, Moose and St. Croix rivers.

PRIZE OFFERED FOR MOTHER GOOSE SKETCH.

Educational Dramatic League Will Display Poster at First Performance on April 27.

The Chicago chapter of the Educational Dramatic league offers a prize of $5 for the best drawing of a modern Mother Goose. The prize winner will be exhibited in the foyer of Cohan's Grand Opera house Thursday afternoon, April 27. On that day and at that time the first presentation of the "Modern Mother Goose" by the Chicago Children's players is to be given.

The drawing must be in black and white and the idea must be original. The scheme suggested, however, is that of a big white goose under whose spread wings appear children's faces as goslings. The drawing must be at least 12x15 inches and contain the lettering, "The Modern Mother Goose." All drawings must be submitted on or before April 15 to the students' department of the Art institute.

The objects of the Educational Dramatic league are the better entertainment of all children, the presentation of children's plays, fairy tales and legends, and eventually, though this is only a dream right now, the dedication of a toy theater to the best plays for all children.

PRIDE of possession is the rightful due of the man who owns a Pathfinder—King of Twelve Cylinder Motor Cars.

Its appearance sets the seasoned motor car enthusiast to racking his brains for new superlatives.

The ultimate in luxury, symmetry and road worthiness has been attained in the body design of the new Pathfinder models.

Pathfinder the Great is truly milady's car because every appointment of elegance and convenience has been unobtrusively built in.

But beauty is of small import as compared to the wonderful qualities of Pathfinder the Great's twelve cylinder motor.

It eats up the steepest hills with the same smooth, effortless pull that it exerts on the level stretches.

It negotiates mud holes and ruts with ease on "high-gear" where many high powered, well built, motor cars strain and vibrate in "second."

Pathfinder the Great is the superlative car because it represents the best so far attained in standard motor car construction.

Bring a seasoned motorist with you when you come to our show rooms. It takes experience to fully appreciate Pathfinder superiority. Demonstration by appointment.

THREAT OF WAR EMBARRASSES PRINCE CONSORT

Queen Wilhelmina's Husband Naturally Object of Prejudice and Suspicion.

BY EX-ATTACHE.

[Copyright, 1916, By the Brentwood Co.]

Holland seems to be hovering on the brink of war, but with whom? Germany says the military measures of the Netherlands are designed to protect the country from an armed descent upon its coasts by an Anglo-French army, bent on attacking Germany through Belgium, and also across Holland's Teuton frontier. But other evidence points the other way, and to the fact that it is the kaiser of whom the Dutch stand in dread just at present. Queen Wilhelmina's troops have been massed, not along the sea coast but on her Belgian and German boundary lines, while Dutch warships have since the torpedoing of the Tubantia, the Elisma, and other vessels flying the flag of the Netherlands, been cooperating with the British navy trawlers and patrol boats in destroying mines which Germany has scattered all along the coast of Holland.

Colyn Does Not Fear Allies.

Jonkheer Colyn, one of the most eminent statesmen of the Netherlands, who formerly filled the office of minister of war, publicly deprecates the idea that the Netherlands are in any danger at the hands of either Great Britain or France, but intimates that Holland should be ready to "take a stand against Germany."

Holland controls the mouth of the Scheldt, and while she continues to do so Emperor William's possession of Antwerp is made almost useless for military or naval action upon Great Britain. The Dutch absolutely control the entrance to the Scheldt, and the access to Antwerp, with magnificent defensive works, equipped three or four years ago, at the instance of the kaiser, with some of the most powerful of Krupp guns. If the Germans have constructed a large fleet of submarines at Antwerp, and in the various shipyards and docks in the neighborhood, none of these can take the sea or be rendered available for service against England as long as the Dutch retain their hold on the mouth of the Scheldt.

Should the Hague government permit a withdrawal of the German army across Holland, without making any attempt to resist the trespass, it would expose itself to severe reprisals on the part of the powers of the entente.

Prince Aggressively German.

Should the Dutch declare themselves against Germany, the question naturally arises as to what disposition would be made of Prince Henry of the Netherlands. Queen Wilhelmina's consort, Duke Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, has, in spite of his naturalization as a Dutchman, on the eve of his wedding, always remained aggressively German. He is in his tastes, his manners, and in his way of looking at things a Prussian to the core, having received his education and military training at Potsdam, where he was stationed as an officer of one of the Jaeger regiments of the Prussian guard up to the time of his marriage.

In most cases, where a woman of sovereign rank bestows her hand upon some foreign prince, he endeavors to identify himself with the land of his adoption and to conciliate its people to the point of inducing them to forget his alien birth. Ferdinand of Coburg, who married Queen Maria da Gloria of Portugal, managed to become so great a favorite among his wife's subjects that they ended by regarding him as one of their own race, while the German husband of the late Queen Victoria made himself so useful in Great Britain that at his death he was mourned throughout the United Kingdom as Albert the Good. But Prince Henry of the Netherlands always has remained aloof from the Dutch and has made little effort to disarm their prejudice.

Has a Difficult Role.

It must be admitted that there is no more difficult position in the world than that of a consort of the feminine ruler of a state, a position for which there is practically no description or designation in diplomatic phraseology, save that of the "Mari de la Reine," which is likewise frequently employed to indicate in ordinary life the husband who is reduced to an altogether subordinate role and obscured by the brilliancy, beauty, imperiousness, and rank of his wife.

If a foreigner by birth, the consort is always suspected of subordinating the interests of the land of his adoption to the land of his birth. His interference in the affairs of the nation is resented, no matter how praiseworthy his aims or useful his achievements. If his wife, as sovereign, gives her sanction to any unpopular measure or lays herself open to the criticism of her lieges, the entire blame is laid at his door and is ascribed to his pernicious foreign influence.

Looked On with Suspicion.

Prince Henry has always been looked upon by the Dutch as a possible instrument of unfriendly designs on the part of Germany, and whereas no objection whatsoever was made by the Dutch to the widowed Queen Emma, who was a German princess of Waldeck, ruling as regent during the eight years of minority of her daughter, Queen Wilhelmina, precautions have been adopted to prevent Prince Henry from taking any share in the government of the kingdom, in the event of his now 7 year old girl, litte Princess Juliana, succeeding to the throne while still a minor.

Not even Prince Henry's conspicuous gallantry in the late winter of 1907 in going out in a lifeboat in a fierce blizzard to rescue the crew and passengers of the steamship City of Berlin, which had been wrecked off the Hook of Holland, served to diminish the prejudice of the Dutch against their queen's German husband. His behavior on that occasion excited the admiration of the entire civilized world and many foreign governments gave expression thereto by bestowing upon him honors reserved for the reward of deeds of heroism. But it did not in any way reconcile the people of Holland to the prince consort, and since the beginning of the present war the animosity against him has been increased.

Queen Observes Neutrality.

Queen Wilhelmina's attitude since the beginning of the present war has been one of the strictest neutrality. If anything, she has leaned somewhat towards France and her allies, this being in accordance with the views of her people. The course followed by her German born mother, Queen Emma, has also been entirely free from reproach, although many of her near and dear relatives have been fighting under the Teuton flag. But the sympathies of Prince Henry in favor of his vaterland have been so pronounced that in the event of Holland becoming involved in the struggle on the side of the allies it will be difficult for him to remain in the land of his adoption.

SEES ALL WORLD BOUND IN LEAGUE TO PREVENT WAR

German Chancellor Says He Is Willing to Give His Support to the Proposal.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

BERLIN, April 8.—A reconstruction of international law which shall bind the civilized nations together and prevent future wars is the hope of Germany, according to Imperial Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg.

The statement was made in an interview with a TRIBUNE correspondent in which the German chancellor was asked how Germany would regard a call by the United States for a world convention, as proposed by Elihu Root, to consider the reconstruction and rendition into written and binding form of international law.

Ready to Make New Laws.

"I will gladly join hands in the reconstruction of international law and, in connection with all other nations of the earth, assist in finding a way that will lead to the making of a new set of laws, founded on the standard principles of the law of nations, which will bind the civilized world into regal unity," the chancellor said.

"I have read with great interest the points raised by your distinguished fellow countryman, Mr. Root. His name is well known in the world of international politics. His utterances are of importance abroad as well as at home. He well says: 'When this war is ended the civilized world will have to determine whether what we call international law is to be continued as a new code of etiquette or is to be a real body of laws imposing obligations more definite and inevitable than heretofore has been the case.'

No Way to Punish Violators.

"Mr. Root deals with a question which during the present war has attracted the earnest attention of nearly every statesman of international character. This question is whether the law of nations definitely has broken down, or whether it will be revived after the war.

"Mr. Root properly points out that the weakness of international law at present lies in the fact that there is no existing provision for the calling to account of violators of that law. He proposes the strengthening of international law and the fixing of penalties and liabilities.

New Devices Make Laws Void.

"So in this war many things which we had come to regard as sacred and permanent assets of our advanced civilization have been wrecked. Furthermore, the use of all kinds of new military devices has been introduced in this war and these constitute factors of first class importance in a scheme for the formation of a new code for international law. The old law has neither rule, code, nor precedent for these devices, but their unusual and peculiar qualities must be taken into consideration.

"You say America, not being a party to this war, is more interested or concerned in what may follow and grow out of it than in the war itself. It is true that at the close of the war one of the greatest problems with which civilization ever has been confronted will be the reconstruction or remodeling of international law and the introduction and application of more definite and binding rules in the matter of relationship between the nations of the earth.

Willing to Frame New Laws.

"I will support a movement to this end and help find a way to the creation of a set of laws which shall bind the whole earth and give each and every nation freedom to develop, grow strong and maintain itself."

This 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers Will Last Any Man 5 Years or More.

She hasn't a weakness. And the sturdiest part of her anatomy is her 3400 r. p. m. engine.

Now there has been a lot of talk about 3400. I find some of my prospects come in here a little bit doubtful about 3400.

They have been told by my contemporaries that an engine turning up 3400 r. p. m. is doomed to short existence.

That's absurd. Why, there are at least three cars in America that do 3100 r. p. m. or better. Ten years ago in Europe there were cars that did 4000 r. p. m.

Take the electric fan. It does around 4000. A turbine reaches about 4300.

Now, the argument set forth against 3400 is the "wear and tear on bearings."

How ridiculous!

Of course, if we had an old-fashioned engine with heavy iron pistons and arm-and-hammer type of connecting rods—then, to be sure, I'd have little to say.

But, to the contrary, this is a very modern engine. The pistons are aluminum, which cost a whole lot more, but weigh a whole lot less.

Then the connecting rods are much lighter.

That takes a lot of weight off the bearings, and permits about 500 r. p. m. more engine speed.

That isn't a very big increase, I know, but it's just enough to make a very foxy, silken affair in action.

And then, too, in traveling 10 miles an hour her engine speed is only 500 r. p. m. At 20 she turns up 1000. At 30, 1500.

How often do you travel faster than 30?

So unless you want to sink the little button to the floor board and hold her there all day, you're not using 3400 r. p. m. all the time.

I hope none of my friends will swallow whole any story deriding 3400.

You know you will always find the largest number of clubs under the best apple tree in the orchard.

This car has doubled my sales.

As Mr. Post says, "There's a reason."

One little ride and you will want to pass up your old gondola.

Ask me about our service inspection coupons. They are negotiable with all Chalmers dealers everywhere. This system is an important consideration in buying your car.

The World's Smartest Vehicle

OWEN MAGNETIC

¶ Two factors make the Owen Magnetic stand out above all other automobiles.

First—elegance of body and appointments—work of master coach builders.

Second—mechanical superiority—power is carried from engine to wheels by smooth, elastic magnetic transmission.

¶ Here is real motoring luxury. On a long road the sensation is like flying—in the constant stops and starts of congested traffic there is no jar. Nerve-racking jolts are gone because there are no change-speed gears. Instead of three or four speeds there are a thousand speeds—the power turns on and off like water. To the experienced motorist the performance of this car is uncanny.

¶ When desired bodies to order by great carriage builders; chassis built and equipped by the Baker R. & L. Company, allied—both in finances and manufacturing—with the General Electric Company. Distinguished people own this car of real distinction.

The weather, together with the excitement attendant upon the aldermanic election, is thought to have been largely responsible for the rather poor showing made by the real estate market last week. The week's comparatively poor record was emphasized by the fact that, whereas there were four transactions in the downtown district during the previous week, there was none during the week just closed. The general movement of property was on a generally much smaller scale, particularly as regards transactions of any real importance.

The continued cold weather is having a particularly depressing effect on the subdivision market, which requires something of an approach to spring weather to interest prospective buyers, and undoubtedly is having a rather bad effect on the general market, as evidenced by the comparatively few dealings of any importance being put through.

General Tone Good.

Despite this, however, there is a generally good undertone to the market, brokers and owners being practically a unit in the belief that with the coming of warmer weather the market will show a big improvement in all classes of property.

Considerable encouragement, too, is found in the fact that there is a noticeable improvement in the rental situation, which, in view of the immense amount of building which has been going on all through the late fall and winter, has been looked upon with considerable apprehension by owners and agents.

The situation is far from satisfactory now, it being practically certain that many vacancies will be carried over, but not to the extent anticipated a few weeks or two months ago.

The situation is a peculiar and spotty one, certain classes of buildings in certain parts of the city renting readily, with well maintained rentals, while in other buildings many vacancies are reported, with agents offering attractive reductions to secure desirable tenants.

L. C. Plans of Interest.

One of the most interesting features of the week's market was the announcement of the plans of the Illinois Central road for the erection of a large office building and station adjoining its Woodlawn station on Sixty-third street. The proposed building will be L shaped, with an extreme depth from Sixty-third street southward of 230 feet.

Its Sixty-third street frontage will cover a part of the fifty feet front now occupied by the present station, the remainder to be utilized for track purposes. It will also occupy sixty-five feet adjoining on the west the present station property. The L will strike Dorchester avenue 15 feet south of Sixty-third street and will have a frontage of 150 feet on the avenue, extending back to the right of way about 150 feet.

Large Space for Offices.

The office building proper will front on Dorchester avenue, but the upper stories of the Sixty-third street frontage of the building will also be occupied for office purposes. It will be chiefly occupied by the accounting department of the road, and it is expected that about 1,000 of the office employes of the road will be located in the building.

It looks now as though the road would be forced to resort to condemnation proceedings to acquire all the ground it will need. It already has acquired 100 feet of Dorchester avenue frontage by purchase.

Obtained from Street Railway.

This was secured from the Chicago City railway, but it is thought it will have to begin condemnation proceedings to secure the ground to the south of this. It also is thought likely it will be compelled to secure forty feet of the Sixty-third street frontage by condemnation.

The building will be of fireproof construction throughout, and will cost in excess of $500,000. The work of construction will begin as soon as the road has acquired the land.

The report of the road's plans has it is said, created something of a boom in that immediate vicinity, both land values and rents having been advanced.

CHICAGO WOMAN'S CLUB'S PROPOSED HOME

Committee Gets Option on Eleventh Street Site for New Building.

Plans for the proposed new permanent home of the Chicago Woman's club have been prepared by Pond & Pond, architects, and have been submitted to the building committee of the club. The clubhouse is eight stories high, with most of the first four stories devoted to a theater, which will seat over 1,200 persons. The upper two floors of the building are to be used exclusively by the Woman's club. For its weekly meetings there will be a banquet hall, seating 500 persons, on the sixth floor. There will be rooms adjoining this which may be rented to other clubs. In the regular quarters of the Woman's club there will be a lounge, a dining room, where 135 women may be served at a time, kitchen, storage room, and rooms for the directors, the president, the secretary, and employes. The club has an option on 104 feet of land on the north side of Eleventh street, half way between Michigan and Wabash avenues. The site has alleys on three sides. It has been offered to the club for $225,000.

FEW CASH SALES OF APARTMENTS

Residence Property Transactions Also Scarce—North Side in the Lead.

Apartment house property again cut a conspicuous figure in the week's business, but, as has been the case for some time, the bulk of the transactions represented trades, the number of cash transactions for investment purposes being comparatively few. There were also few transactions in residence property of any moment.

The north side furnished the most important deals of the week, in one of which a nonresident, W. A. Sanford of Big Rapids, Mich., purchased from Martin L. Corby the twenty-four flat building on 121x151 feet of ground at the southwest corner of Glenwood and Arthur avenues for a reported $110,000, subject to $64,500, but the stamps indicated only $17,300 paid for the equity. The purchaser gave in part payment a farm of 177 acres near Paris, Mich. Robert C. Johnson and Lee Mendenhall were the brokers.

Sheridan Road Corner Sold.

Richard D. and Charlotte D. Lyman sold to Rudolph Lederer the eighteen flat building with 100x146 feet of ground at the northeast corner of Sheridan road and Argyle street for an indicated $167,500, subject to $72,000. The building will be remodeled so as to be suitable for business purposes. James Patton of Lyman & Patton, Krause, Beak & Co., and H. W. Croxton were the brokers. Krause, Beak & Co. to have charge of the property.

The "Adseke," a twenty-four flat building on 155x125 feet on Kimball avenue, 131 feet north of Lawrence avenue, west front, was sold by John J. Johnson to Charles L. Teckler for an indicated $91,000, subject to $57,772, the purchaser conveying a farm of 206 acres south of Palatine for a reported $40,000. C. H. Connelly represented both parties. It is said no preliminary contract was drawn, the principals simply shaking hands to bind the bargain.

Paulina Street Deal.

John T. Fitzgerald sold to Edward E. and Katherine Leadbeater the twenty-one flat building at the northwest corner of Paulina street and Glenlake avenue, lot 61x167 feet, for a reported $50,000, trade to the amount of $30,000 being given. O. P. Curran Jr. was the broker.

Elisabeth Bertha sold to Rose Conn the three flat building at 5121 University avenue, lot 50x164 feet, for a reported $35,000, subject to $24,000, the three flat building on 30x178 feet on Michigan avenue, 395 feet north of Fifty-first street, being given in part payment. Willis & Frankenstein were the brokers.

J. S. Hered sold to Jacob R. Finkelstein the flat property in Grand boulevard 100 feet north of Forty-first street, on 50x163 feet, east front, for an indicated $37,000, subject to $28,000.

Other Sales of the Week.

Other sales of the week were:

N. P. Weber to George J. Kappes, the flat property at the southeast corner of Malden street and Leland avenue, lot 55x165 feet, for an indicated $42,500.

Louis Zounis bought from Eva Davis the twelve flat building on 60x120 feet, northwest corner Forty-first street and Calumet avenue, for a reported $32,000, subject to $17,000. George J. Jank & Co. and Krause, Beak & Co. were the brokers.

C. V. Collins to George F. Holla, the flat property in Vincennes avenue, 104 feet south of Forty-fourth street, lot 50x163 feet, for an indicating $28,700, subject to $18,000.

NO BIDDERS AT LOOP SALE.

When the M. C. McDonald property at 123-25 North Clark street, north of and adjoining the entrance of Cohan's Opera house, was offered for sale recently, in pursuance of a decree of partition, there were no bidders. It is 20x80½ feet, at the southeast corner of Court place, and is improved with a five story building. It was expected that John Borden, who owns the adjoining property, would make a bid, but he failed to do so.

PLANS HOTEL AND THEATER.

It is said that plans are being prepared by Architect Henry L. Newhouse for a three story hotel and theater, the latter with a seating capacity of 1,500, to be erected at the northwest corner of Grand boulevard and Forty-seventh street. The building is to be erected by J. M. Browarsky and is expected to cost about $200,000.

2,000 Babies in Parade.

SHERIDAN ROAD VACANT BRINGS A RECORD PRICE

Corner at Belmont Avenue Sells for $510 a Foot—Two Good Deals on the North Side.

One of the notable features of the week's market was the sale of Sheridan road vacant at the southwest corner of Belmont avenue at the rate of $510 a foot, a record figure for that locality. The property fronts 245½ feet on the road with a depth of 175 feet on Belmont, and was sold by Miss Ellen S. Young to Mrs. Alice D. Barrett, widow of the late S. E. Barrett, head of the Barret Manufacturing company, for an expressed consideration of $125,000, Mrs. Barrett paying $30,000 cash and giving a part purchase money mortgage for $95,000.

The property, which overlooks the yacht harbor, and has an unobstructed view of the lake, has been in the Young family, it is said, for between sixty and seventy years, and has been subject only to one transfer since it went into the possession of the Young family from the government.

No Improvement Plans.

It is said that Mrs. Barrett has no plans looking to its immediate improvement, but it is thought she likely will sell some of the inside frontage and improve the corner with a high grade apartment building or apartment hotel.

It adjoins on the north the apartment building erected a few years ago by former Mayor Harrison and is across Belmont avenue from the Chase apartments at the northwest corner of the two streets. Paul Steinbrecher & Co. represented Mrs. Barrett in the transaction and Cochran & McCluer represented Miss Young.

Another Notable North Side Deal.

Another notable north side deal was the sale by Charles H. Muller to Joseph H. Buttas of the B. W. Construction company of the 100x197 feet at the northwest corner of Surf street and Pine Grove avenue for a reported $40,000, at the rate of $400 a foot, thought to be a record figure for that locality.

Two old residences on the lot will be torn down and a twenty-four flat building of four, five, six, and seven rooms, two and three bathrooms, will be erected by Mr. Buttas in connection with C. H. Kusel of Kusel & Harris, to cost about $175,000, after plans by Roy O. France. Stafford & Trankle were the brokers, and they negotiated a serial bond issue loan of $130,000 at 6 per cent.

Fred Becklenberg purchased from Mary F. Fouse the 120x100 feet at the northeast corner of Pine Grove avenue and Gary place for a reported $25,000. He will improve with a twenty-eight flat building of three and four rooms, with sun parlors, to cost about $120,000. Floyd E. Miller of W. K. Young & Bro. was the broker.

Charles P. Lundstrom will erect a forty-two flat court building on 100x153½ feet in Lincoln street ninety-two feet north of Montrose boulevard, which he purchased from John A. Fishleigh. The building will cost $85,000. Fred P. Kienzle & Co. were the brokers.

STEPSON OF A. G. SPALDING NOW UNDER GUARDIANSHIP.

Durant Churchill Adjudged Incompetent on Mother's Testimony—Action Bears on Will Contest.

Oakland, Cal., April 8.—Durant Churchill, 37 years old, stepson of the late Albert G. Spalding, baseball magnate, was placed today under the guardianship of his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Churchill Spalding, on her testimony before Judge Wells in the Superior court here that he was mentally incompetent to handle his estate. He is in a sanitarium near here.

Spalding's sons by a former wife are seeking to break their father's will, alleging that Mrs. Katherine Tingley, head of a Theosophical institute, Mrs. Spalding, and Churchill unduly influenced him. Today's action placed the son's claim under the mother's jurisdiction.

TWO GOOD SALES REPORTED IN LAKE FOREST DISTRICT.

Two interesting sales in Lake Forest district were closed by John Griffith. One is the sale by Charles W. Folds to Robert J. Dunham of Armour & Co. of the property in University road, comprising six acres, handsomely landscaped and improved with a house containing twenty rooms, erected only about three years ago. A nominal consideration is given in the transfer. Mr. Folds owns another piece of property on Elm road, improved with a bungalow. He will enlarge the bungalow and occupy the place as his residence. The other deal was the purchase by Miss Eglantine Stewart from the De Meyer estate of a tract of eighty acres on Telegraph road. It is understood the sale was at the rate of $250 an acre. It is said the property will be improved with a handsome residence by the purchaser.

SCIENTISTS PURCHASE SITE.

Twelfth Church of Christ, Scientist, of Chicago, has purchased a plot of ground on Grace street which it plans to improve with a permanent church building. The property, which is on the south side of Grace street, midway between Pine Grove avenue and Sheridan road, fronts 137 feet with a depth of nearly 200 feet. The church was organized in 1913 and is now holding services in the North Shore Hebrew congregation.

Leases and Loans.

There was nothing of a particularly important character in leases and loans during the week, although the downtown district as well as outlying property were represented by fairly good sized transactions.

In the outlying territory L. M. Johnson leased to Ascher Bros., who operate a string of theaters, a building at the northeast corner of Center street and Lane place, to contain a theater with a seating capacity of 1,000 and three stores, for ten years, at a term rent of $104,000. The building will front 95 feet on Center street and 114 feet on Lane place, and is expected to be completed about July 1. Mr. Johnson, who owns the corner, purchased 40x94 feet from Medill McCormick for $12,000. White & Tabor were the brokers and Fred V. Prather designed the building.

E. C. Brownlee has leased for Frederick Barnhelsel to Joe Roussel the store and basement at 518 South Wabash avenue for a term of ten years at a total rent of $46,000, or $4,500 a year. The premises will be occupied as a French restaurant and buffet.

The same broker has leased to the Thurber Art galleries one-half of the fifth floor in the Barnhelsel building, at 616-22 South Michigan avenue, for five years, at a term rent of $22,500; to Rudolf Bohunek, artist, space on the eighth floor of the same building, for five years, at a term rent of $12,000; to the Barrett Changer company, space on the third floor, for five years, at a term rent of $10,500; to the Chicago Camera club, space on the seventh floor, for five years, at a term rent of $9,000.

The North Shore Fireproof Storage company has leased to the Atlas company a garage it will erect on 50x140 feet of ground at 4825-27 Broadway for ten years at a reported term rent of $25,500. Stein & Ehrhardt were the brokers.

W. J. Gough reports the lease for E. Eiger & Bro. the entire twelfth floor in the Cunard building at the southwest corner of Randolph and Dearborn streets for a reported term rent of $45,000; also to Michael Dolen and F. K. Blake, attorneys, space on the ninth floor, same building, for a reported term rent of $15,000.

Joseph E. Swanson has given a trust deed to the Hibernian Banking association to secure a loan of $200,000, ten years, at 5 per cent, secured by the Astec apartments at the southwest corner of Fullerton avenue and Lincoln parkway.

The American Bond and Mortgage company has made a bond issue loan of $137,000, two to ten years, at 6 per cent, to Warren B. Buckley and Nels Grose on the property at 226-30 Delaware place, with high grade, fireproof, fourteen apartment building.

Fred Becklenberg, the builder, has given a trust deed to the Chicago Title and Trust company, trustee, to secure a building loan of $85,000, five years, at 6 per cent, secured by the Ardencourt apartments at the northeast corner of Champlain avenue and Fiftieth place.

The same trust company is also trustee in a loan of $120,000, seven years, at 5½ per cent, to Wilton D. Martin, secured by the Wilton apartments at the southwest corner of Walton place and Seneca street.

Edward F. Waline has sold to Mary R. Farley the residence property at 4438 Greenview avenue, lot 50x150 feet, for an indicated consideration of $13,000.

Commissioner of Agriculture for Iceland Discharged After Arrest on Complaint of Car Conductor.

Paul R. Ingvason, commissioner of agriculture of Iceland, was discharged yesterday morning by Judge Caverly in the South Clark street court. Mr. Ingvason was arrested Friday night on complaint of a street car conductor at North State and Washington streets, who testified that Mr. Ingvason created a disturbance after the conductor refused to accept a transfer from Mr. Ingvason.

Mr. Ingvason has been delegated by his government to study sociological conditions in this country.

"When the conductor refused the transfer I was interested to see how a great corporation in this country treated its patron," Ingvason testified.

The conductor refused to explain the reason for his refusal to accept it and I refused to pay another fare, as was demanded by him, unless he did. When I refused to pay he took a hold of me and when I resisted he struck me and then had me arrested.

The conductor, whose badge number is 2,086, denied he struck the first blow.

LA CROSSE, WIS., IN DANGER FROM FLOODED MISSISSIPPI.

Water Covers Railroad Tracks and Enters Basements in Wholesale District.

La Crosse, Wis., April 8.—With water entering basements in the wholesale district along the river front, where thousands of dollars' worth of merchandise is stored, flooding railroad tracks, roads, and parks, the Mississippi river flood assumed an ominous aspect in this city today. The high water passed the thirteen foot mark on the government gauge.

The main tracks of all the railroads leading into La Crosse from the north and across the marsh into South La Crosse are almost level with the water. Bridges over the several channels of the Mississippi and Black rivers are just out of water, and great quantities of debris are being piled against them, threatening their safety.

The crest of the flood is expected here Sunday night or Monday. St. Paul is the only point above here which shows a decline in the stage today, and the fall there is only one-tenth of a foot for the last twenty-four hours.

SEVEN ARCHITECTS' FIRMS ON BOARD OF TRADE PLANS.

Seven leading architectural firms of Chicago have been working on plans for the proposed new board of trade building for several weeks and it is expected that tentative plans will be completed before the 1st of May. As soon as the committee of the board accepts a plan the architects will be instructed to go ahead with the data, and it is expected that the work of tearing down the present building will be under way by fall at the latest. President J. F. Grimm has appointed John H. Jones to succeed the late Edward A. Nickels on the board. The other members are B. A. Eckhart, James A. Patten, George M. Reynolds, and Joseph Simons.

WARD & CO.'S PURCHASE LEADS DEALS OF WEEK

Gets Tract to North of Plant for $3.12 a Square Foot—No Plans Announced.

It transpires that Montgomery Ward & Co. were the actual purchasers of the dock property at the foot of Oak street on the North branch, which was reported in yesterday's TRIBUNE as having been acquired by William H. Haffner. It appears that Mr. Haffner merely took title for Ward & Co. from Bertha W. Furst. The property, which is just north of the plant of Ward & Co. at the river and Chicago avenue, comprises 42,627 square feet, for which $133,210 was paid, which is at the rate of $3.12½ a squart foot. In a sales way it was the most important transaction of the week, and in this connection it is interesting to note that the north side furnished a majority of the really important deals.

It is stated the company has no present plans with reference to improving the property, and that it was purchased with a view to probable requirements in the near future.

200 Feet on the River.

The property has a frontage of about 200 feet on the river, extending through to Kingsbury street, about 222 feet, with a frontage of about 200 feet on that street, and is served with a private switch track of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road. The present improvements are of an old character and are said not to have been considered in the transaction. The Bowes Realty company was the broker, and the present deal is one of several negotiated in this particular section by that firm within the last year.

New Jersey Woman Files Lease.

There was filed for record a lease by Emma C. Wooster of Cranford, N. J., to J. B. King & Co. of the property in Lumber street, 295 feet southwest of Eighteenth street, northwest front, 170 feet to the Chicago river, for twenty years from July 1 at an annual rent of $3,900, or $78,000 for the term.

Record also was made of the acquirement by Francis H. Hardy from the Chicago Motor Car company of the leasehold interest in the 61x127 feet, south front, in Twenty-fourth street, 123 feet east of Michigan avenue, for an indicated consideration of $60,000. It adjoins property acquired by Mr. Hardy a short time ago.

Nathan K. Aranof sold to Jennie Seeleg the business property, northwest corner Twelfth and Mozart streets, 50x125 feet, with three story building, with stores, offices, and flats, for a reported $62,500, but the deed showed it to be much less. The sale was subject to an incumbrance of $37,000. Trade valued at $37,000, subject to $18,000, was given. Seymour Marks and Marks & Maun were the brokers.

Sixteenth Street Deal.

The northeast corner of Sixteenth street and Clifton Park avenue, 125x50 feet, with building containing seven stores and two flats, was sold by Hyman Karr and Joseph D. Schmidt to Louis Shapiro for a reported $33 000, subject to $13,000 Trade valued at $13,500 was given. The Liberty Realty company was the broker.

Herman R. Misch bought from Samuel Coine the two story and basement brick business building on a lot 50x120 feet, at 2864 to 2866 Milwaukee avenue. A consideration of $26,000 is reported, the sale being subject to an incumbrance of $16,000. M. Klein & Co. represented both parties.

ONE BATH IN EIGHT DAYS AVERAGE FOR GOTHAMITES.

So New York Health Department Finds—Fails to Consider Men Cleaned in Wall Street.

New York, April 8.—New York is wondering tonight why it is, according to Health Commissioner Emerson's report, that Bronx residents take a bath every day, Brooklynites once every five days, and Manhattanites, the grubby souls, only once every eight days.

One resentful Manhattan man, on reading the statistical indictment, retorted that many a man gets "cleaned" in Wall street every day, and the health department never hears about it.

RAILWAY WAGE DISPUTE VITAL TO U. S. TRADE

All Classes Affected by Higher Rates—Public Should Decide Controversy.

BY JOHN V. FARWELL.
[Chicago Merchant.]

Transportation and credit are the life blood of commerce. Stop either of them and the industries of the country would quickly die. Check them, and business everywhere would feel the stagnating effect. The whole scheme of production and merchandising in operation today would be impossible without our rapid, efficient, and cheap railway transportation, and our highly and excellently organized credit system.

Much thought and discussion are being devoted to the extension of our trade to foreign markets, and to the credit, transportation, or other means to enable us to retain a share in the trade of other countries after the present abnormal conditions have passed. For all American growers and manufacturers except those located directly upon the seaboard the factor of railroad transportation is one of the determining influences affecting their ability to compete for foreign trade.

Railway Rates and Business.

The ability of the North Dakota farmer, the Michigan lumberman, or the Texas cotton grower to sell his product profitably in Liverpoool or any other foreign market may depend largely upon the reasonableness of railway rates. Other nations have appreciated this and have made use of it in extending their foreign commerce.

The great success of Germany, in the period preceding the present war, in building up her trade in highly competitive outside markets was due in some measure to her readiness to make exceedingly low railway rates on export products.

To the business men of the United States foreign trade, important as it is, remains a matter of far less importance than domestic business. No merchant or manufacturer needs to be told of the important role played by the machinery of transportation in the latter field.

Questions of traffic facilities and rates engross a great part of the attention of every man doing an extensive business. In hundreds of cases his ability to sell in a particular market is determined by this factor alone.

Disturbances in Transportation.

Great general credit disturbances have undoubtedly been prevented by the passage of the federal reserve act and the organization of credit made possible by its provisions.

This other great factor in commerce, railroad transportation, is still subject to great disturbances, and there is need of much public education and discussion before the difficult problem will be equally well solved.

The people of the United States paid to the railroads last year a transportation bill of $3,000,000. Of this amount approximately three-fourths was for the carrying of goods. This sum seems a large one, but it sinks to a modest percentage when compared with the total value of the goods handled.

The point of importance is that all railway income, and consequently all railway outgo, is paid by the business public. Anything that affects transportation cost becomes a matter of direct concern to all business men and to all consumers. The money the railroads collect for their services is expended for a variety of purposes. The largest single item of expenditure is for wages. Statistics show that 63 cents out of every dollar paid out by the railroads goes to meet the pay roll.

Aside from the wages, the cost of equipment and other improvements, taxes, pensions, and interest upon indebtedness account for some of the larger expenditures. If anything is left over after costs have been met it goes to the creation of a reserve fund or in dividends to pay stockholders for the use of their capital.

Surplus and dividends are in their way as essential to the successful operation of a railway system as are tracks and terminals, for without them it is impossible to attract the capital required for improvements and extensions.

No other wage rate or price question is so thoroughly imbued with a public interest as are those connected with railroads. A general increase in railroad rates affects indirectly the price of every commodity. If an increase in wages increases rates, as it inevitably must, under present conditions, it will also have the same effect.

Charges Increase Cost of Living.

Every individual, especially the farmer and the laboring man, whether he knows it or not, has a cost of living interest in this present controversy between the trainmen and the railroads.

It is true at the present time, owing to the rush of war shipments and to a resulting increase in domestic trade, that railway earnings are showing marked improvement. But it is an accepted principle of business that peak earnings, due to exceptionally favorable conditions, cannot be accepted as a justification for an increase in permanent charges such as this advance in wages would involve.

If it were possible—of course it is no—to fix wages in direct proportion to earnings, so that they would rise and fall with the latter, there might be some reason for adding temporarily to the size of the railroad pay roll. We all know that several lean years regularly follow a good year in railroad business. If the railroads raise their wages now because of temporary high earnings, it will mean that when the next decline in earnings comes they cannot lower their wages, and they will be worse off than they were a year ago.

With the justice of the demands put forward by the locomotive engineers, firemen, conductors, and trainmen, I shall not attempt to deal. I have an opinion on this subject.

People Should Decide Question.

The railways are public servants. The employés are quasi public servants. They alone cannot be allowed to determine issues involving a public utility of such importance. The railway managers cannot be allowed to decide them. Nor can the two together be permitted to adjust their differences without consulting the public's interests.

The public must, and in my judgment surely will be in favor of moving toward a solution which will make the transportation factor in commerce as free from destructive disturbances as the federal reserve act has made our vast system of credit.

PORK BILLS? NO! THEY'RE ALL FOR DEFENSE OF U. S.

So Podunk Asks Public Building Built Like Fort to Protect Dear Ones.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., April 8.—[Special.]—Senator Kenyon of Iowa today read to the senate a letter he received from a former constituent demanding that he support a public buildings appropriation bill on the ground in order to improve the country's defenses.

"We spent five weeks on a power dam bill," Senator Kenyon said, "on the theory that it was a preparedness measure. We passed from that to another power dam bill, and that was a question of preparedness. It seems as if we had just one dam bill after another. And now they are urging appropriations in the river and harbor bill for Podunk and all the other creeks on the ground of preparedness; and here comes my former constituent with this letter."

Here Is the Argument.

"As a former resident of your state," the letter read, "I make bold to write you concerning one feature of preparedness to which congress does not seem to be paying the attention it should, and that is the question of appropriations for public buildings. I know you have in the past opposed items in the public buildings bill for public buildings in small towns. Now, my dear senator, please don't do so any more.

"We are expecting a public building in our town. One member of congress promised it to us during the campaign and we are entitled to it. Besides, think of what it may mean along the lines of preparedness. The public buildings to be constructed in the future should be constructed as a fort. A round building is just as feasible as a square one for postoffice purposes; then, when we are at the front fighting the battles of our country our wives and children can stay in the public building if it is constructed as a fort, and we will feel that they are safe from foreign invaders.

Then Lewis Raises Laugh.

"If you are really a lover of your country, do not oppose any appropriations for public buildings. Of course, if you intend to side against your country and sympathize with its foes and be untrue to the flag that means so much to us, then we cannot expect any help from you in securing our public building."

As the senator concluded reading the letter, Senator Lewis of Illinois arose and observed he need have no fears with respect to the feelings of his former constituent.

"No one has ever presumed to say," Senator Lewis said, "that the public buildings were on the square."

Even the senate snickered.

The Undersigned Offer for Sale at Par—$1.00 Per Share
350,000 Shares of the Capital Stock of the Pennsylvania Gasoline Company

PRODUCERS OF NATURAL GAS AND MANUFACTURERS OF HIGH GRADE GASOLINE

Capital Stock 1,000,000 Shares—Par Value $1 Per Share—All Issued

NO BONDS—NO PREFERRED STOCK.

From a letter of the President of the Pennsylvania Gasoline Company under date of March 23rd, we summarize as follows:

ORGANIZATION.—This corporation is incorporated under the Laws of Delaware. Capital stock 1,000,000 shares—par value $1 per share. There are no bonds or preferred stock.

BUSINESS.—The company is engaged in the production of natural gas and the manufacture of high grade gasoline, which it produces from natural gas.

PLANTS.—At present two plants are in operation, one located at Bradford, McKean Co., Pa., and the other at Red House Township, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., on the New York-Pennsylvania border line.

EQUIPMENT.—These plants are equipped with all the necessary machinery, power, storage tanks, tank cars, loading and shipping facilities and have some twelve miles of pipe lines connecting with railroad.

PROPERTY AND CONTRACTS.—The company owns the leases of the oil and gass rights on approximately 5,000 acres known as Hoffman Leases, situated in McKean Co., Penna., and on which one of its gasoline plants is situated. This territory is practically all PROVEN GAS LAND. At present there are three producing gas wells on this property, with drilling locations for 230 more. The property is, therefore, less than 2% developed, based on one well location to every 20 acres. There is approximately $30,000 indebtedness against these leases which becomes due periodically over a period of three years. Payments can be anticipated at any time. There are no payments due at this time.

The company also has exclusive gasoline contracts covering a period of ten years from September, 1914, on all the gas produced from 7,000 acres of leases, located in Cattaraugus County, New York State, and on which there are 22 producing wells. This latter property is less than 5% drilled, and is rated by experts as proven gas land. On this property it is proposed during this spring and summer, to drill a number of wells, which should result in furnishing to this corporation a minimum of 1,000,000 feet of gas per day, from which 3,000 gallons of gasoline should be produced daily. This property is equipped with forty miles of main pipe line and laterals, so that its gas production will be easily available for use.

In addition to the above, the Pennsylvania Gasoline Company is negotiating contracts for the gasoline rights on 1,000,000 feet daily production of gas, WHICH IS NOW BEING PRODUCED IN THE VICINITY OF ITS BRADFORD PLANT. This gas has been tested and averages three gallons per 1,000 feet, equal to about 3,000 gallons per day. It is proposed to erect additional plant units to handle this new production, which can be utilized as soon as the necessary pipe lines are laid connecting up the gas.

PRESENT PRODUCTION.—The Pennsylvania Gasoline Company at present is producing about 1,000 gallons of gasoline per day. During the past six months of actual operating days, up to March 1st, it had produced and sold 180,000 gallons of gasoline, for which it received an average price of 12c per gallon. This low price was caused by contracts having been entered into some time ago. The company has completed all of its contracts for delivery at low prices, with the exception of one, on which there are still 32,000 gallons to be delivered at 19c per gallon. After this delivery, which should be completed before April 10th, it will be in a position to avail itself of the prevailing high prices of gasoline, which is now 22c per gallon, carload lots, f. o. b. Company's plants.

EARNINGS.—Present earnings average about $220 per day, based on 1,000 gallon production and a wholesale price at the plant of 22c. Without affecting the Company's present capitalization, the management expects within ninety days that it will have completed its piping arrangements and new lpant units to a point where total production will exceed 4,000 gallons daily, from which, at present prices, its income should approximate $880 per day, and within three months thereafter an additional 2,000 gallons per day and by the end of 1916 a further 3,000 gallons, making a total production of 9,000 gallons per day by December 31st, 1916, which at PRESENT PRICES for gasoline would produce a gross income of about $2,000 per day. The cost of production and fixed operating expenses average less than 20% of the present market price of the product, OR ABOUT SIX CENTS PER GALLON. The company's indebtedness, exclusive of Hoffman lease above referred to, is approximately $5,000, none of which is due and payable.

MANAGEMENT.—The management, both executive and field, is in the hands of efficient, experienced men, who are the largest shareholders in the corporation.

MARKET.—Application will be made to list this stock for trading on the New York Curb and on one or more important Stock Exchanges.

TRANSFER AGENT & REGISTRAR.—Security Transfer & Registrar Company, 66 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

CONCLUSION.—The extraordinary situation now prevailing in the gasoline market and the unquestionable shortage in this commodity indicate that a market price considerably in excess of the present may soon be expected. The profits of this corporation, therefore, promise to be unusually large and continually increasing. Authorities on the gasoline situation have no hesitancy in predicting a 40c market before September 1st or an advance of almost 100% over present prices, and producers are reported to have refused to enter into long time contracts even at that figure.

Attention is called to the fact that, while the gas leases controlled by this company are recognized as proven property, the company is not dependent upon drilling operations for its gas, its policy being to contract for established production for which it pays a small royalty, amounting to less than 10% of the present retail market price, for the gasoline rights. It is intended, however, to do a large amount of drilling during the Spring and Summer, which should result, not only in a considerable increase in gasoline production, but in substantial profits from the sale of natural gas produced therefrom.

It is also worthy of mention to say that no estimate has been placed by the management on the possibilities of oil production from this company's leases, although they are situated in the oldest and best established oil and gas field in the United States, and substantial oil production may reasonably be expected as a result of drilling operations.

Books to receive applications will be opened Monday, April 10th, at the offices of the undersigned, and will be closed without notice. The right is reserved to reject any or all applications or to allot less than the amount applied for. Checks payable to either of the undersigned, for the full amount, must accompany each application. Reservations may be made by wire at our expense.

The properties of this company consist of 945 acres of proven gold bearing gravel ground, situated in Humbolt county, Nevada, about 12 miles from the town of Golconda, on the main line of the Southern Pacific Railway. The entire property has been carefully prospected and tested, and seems to show, in free gold, an average of more than 61 cents per cubic yard. About 160 acres gives excellent indications of yielding as much as $8.50 per yard. Total cubic yards in the property estimated at over 22,000,000.

The active development of the property is now under way, ample funds for this purpose having been secured. There is abundant water, and about 6,000 feet of 16 inch pipe on hand. A monitor (giant) of the most approved type has been purchased, the pipe is being run from pressure box, and hydraulicking will begin immediately. An ample force of rock-pickers and other laborers required are on the ground.

The company plans to first work the rich 160 odd acres by hydraulicking, and expects to begin the saving and selling of gold within 60 days or less. Should this work yield as much as is expected, the company will be able to disburse a cash dividend of several times the very small amount of its authorized capital. A modern dredger will then be installed, and every inch of the ground carefully worked. The mines are very easy of access, over a splendid road.

Application will be duly made to list these shares on the New York Curb.

SEWARD FUTURE METROPOLIS OF ALASKA COUNTRY

Terminus of Uncle Sam's New Railroad—Has Large, Well Protected Harbor.

BY FRANK G. CARPENTER.

[Copyright: 1916: By Frank G. Carpenter.]

SEWARD, Alaska.—Seward, the New York of Alaska, is the terminus of Uncle Sam's new railroad, and it will be a great ocean port of the future. Its citizens are already comparing it with Stockholm, the capital of Sweden, which has almost 400,000 inhabitants. They claim its location is similar, and that it will be the gateway to resources equal to those of the Scandinavian countries.

They point out that Norway, Finland, Sweden, and Denmark, which are in the same latitude and have much the same climate, have a population of over 12,000,000. They say that Alaska will some day have 20,000,000, and that Seward will be its chief port.

Seward is on the great Gulf of Alaska, at about the middle of the southern coast of the territory. It is at the lower end of the Kenai peninsula, about as far from Ketchikan, where the Seattle steamers first call, as the distance between New York and Cleveland, and it is only a little farther than that to the Unimak pass of the Aleutian islands, through which the ships go on their way from Seattle to Nome.

Six Days from Puget Sound.

Seward is six days by steamer from the Puget Sound ports. It is about as far from Seattle as from New York to Sioux City or Omaha, and the fare is $45. When the new railroad is completed it will be less than 500 miles from the terminus at Fairbanks, from where steamers can go via the Tanana and Yukon to a great part of the interior of Alaska.

The harbor of Seward is Resurrection bay, a magnificent inlet, whose waters are surrounded by mountains and so guarded by islands that here, in the midst of this region of terrible storms, the ships lie as quiet and safe as they do inside the docks of Hamburg and Liverpool.

A mountain wall rises straight above Seward to a height of several thousand feet, losing itself in the great range of mountains that bounds one side of the harbor and runs back into the interior, fading away into the snow capped regions behind. The first hundred feet is covered with green trees.

Bay Protected by Mountains.

The bay itself is about sixteen miles long, and it is protected on all sides from the gales. Its waters are from 600 to 1,200 feet deep. Indeed, the depth is so great as to be an objection, the only really safe anchorage outside the wharves being at Sunny cove, on Fox island, where for the space of about 320 acres the water is so shallow that ships can lie there.

The harbor of Seward is as beautiful as any in the world, and its surroundings of green, mixed with glaciers and snow, are like those of no other harbor on the face of the earth. The whole is a mighty amphitheater of green lowland and blue waters and of glacier clad hills, roofed by the clear sky and the white and black of the clouds.

The wharves are built upon piles, and just back of them the business section of the city is located. For a distance of perhaps one-third of a mile the ground rises, giving excellent drainage. The streets climb the hills to that point, and then go over a slope which rolls gently on until it reaches the mountain wall in the rear.

The city has several banks. It has drug stores, hardware stores, provision stores, and stores selling clothing and dry goods. It has its saloons and billiard halls.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Memphis, Tenn., April 8.—[Special.]—After devoting five weeks to preparedness Chicago's new Cubs will go into battle Wednesday at Cincinnati, where they will open the 1916 war for the National league pennant. Before a gun has been fired it looks as if it will be one of the most exciting wars in the history of the great American game, and indications are that Chicago will be in the thick of the fight all the way.

The Chicago force under the command of Joe Tinker is like a stranger in the old league. Besides Tinker, there are several men on the club who wear the scars of other wars, and there also are recruits with the enthusiasm of youth, making altogether a great combination for a long siege.

Not Ready, Tinker Thinks.

Judging from the showing made in practice battles, the Cubs either are not great or else they are not ready. Manager Tinker thinks it is the latter condition. He is convinced that his squad is a fighting one and one possessing ability to stand up under the most strenuous firing. It certainly is a much better ball team than represented Chicago in the National league last year, and it shouldn't require a much greater team to accomplish stirring results.

So much building up and tearing down were necessary that even at this writing, four days before the opening, there is doubt as to the exact lineup of the Cubs for the first combat. A lack of speed has marked the Cubs since the first day they began training in the Florida camp. Two or three individuals possess it to a marked degree, but on the whole the Cubs of today are not fast.

Tinker needs more pepper around the middle bag in the defensive play; he needs more alertness in base running and better teamwork at all times.

Pitchers May Win Flag.

Whether those faults can be improved sufficiently to make the Cubs a pennant team remains to be seen. If they can't, there still is a chance to win if the pitching staff goes through in exceptional style. Natural baseball ability is present in abundance.

There are three of the Cubs' most sturdy pitchers ready to go to the slab against the Reds in the opening game. Perhaps Manager Tinker will not decide which one shall be chosen until ten minutes before the bell rings. Claude Hendrix, George McConnell, and Jim Vaughn, a trio whose combined weight would be about 575 pounds and whose combined length would be more than 18½ feet, are the ones who will warm up in front of the bench. It looks as if Hendrix is the most likely man to be picked, depending largely on the antics of his spitball on that particular day.

Eastern Teams Are Stronger.

In spite of the Cubs' tardiness in getting into playing form, there is a chance for them to hold their own with the strong teams of the league in the opening weeks of the race, because of the schedule. All the rules of dope indicate that the strength of the National league this season will lie in three of the eastern teams and only one of the western quartet.

For more than three weeks the eastern teams will be fighting each other, and consequently no one team of that section is likely to get a large majority of victories. Experts are picking Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Chicago as the strong clubs, with Brooklyn holding a possible chance. Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and Cincinnati are set down as the weak ones.

While Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Brooklyn will be fighting one another, there is the dope chance of Chicago's getting a flying start by cleaning up on Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Pittsburgh. Of course that is only a dope chance. So much of the unexpected can happen in baseball that one need not be surprised if St. Louis, or Pittsburgh, or Cincinnati is leading the league when May 10 arrives.

Cubs Strong in Outfield.

Joe Tinker has a strong set of outfielders in Flack, Williams, Zwilling, Schulte, and Mann. All of them are likely to be carried, and it looks as if the first three mentioned will be the trio on duty when the season opens.

Saier at first and Zim at third are infield quantities about which Tinker will not have to worry. If Steve Yerkes achieves anything near his Boston form, second base will be well cared for also. Shortstop seems the only infield spot about which there is any considerable doubt. Mike Doolan is expected to take care of that situation after he gets into shape, and it looks as if Tinker will intrust the job to Eddie Mulligan until the veteran is ready for hard work.

Jimmy Archer looks more active behind the bat than he has in three years and should have a great season with such a reliable helper as Bill Hoover. Besides McConnell, Hendrix, and Vaughn, there are a couple of other pitchers in good shape, and still two or three more who should come when hot weather arrives.

Pierce looks better than ever before and is strong against St. Louis, Boston, and Brooklyn. Packard and Seaton may not be used much before June, but should take up the burden when hot weather comes.

The team as a whole hasn't displayed the quick wit of the old Cub days, but Tinker will manage from the bench, and it looks as if the players will have to glance at the bench for wit, and often there isn't time for that.

RUSSELL, P.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Which of two lineups he will start the season with Manager Rowland of the White Sox does not expect to decide until the eve of the pennant race, which opens next Wednesday. He has not yet picked his outfield trio nor his pitcher.

Depending on whether Eddie Murphy or John Collins is the third man in the gardens, the batting order against Detroit in the first game will be either:

Murphy, rf; Weaver, 3b; E. Collins, 2b; Fournier, 1b; Jackson, lf; Felsch, cf; Terry, ss; Schalk, c, and the pitcher; or,

Felsch, cf; Weaver, 3b; E. Collins, 2b; Fournier, 1b; Jackson, lf; J. Collins, rf; Terry ss; Schalk, c, and the pitcher.

Murphy or Shano.

Just what will determine his choice of a right fielder the Sox boss declines to state. It is my guess that the showing of the two rivals in the remaining practice games will have much to do with it. The former Mack outfielder is a left handed batsman. John Collins bats right handed. Murphy has been slower to reach top speed than the Sox veteran this spring. The combination may turn the scale at the start against Murphy.

The best guess on Manager Rowland's choice of slabman for the opening game is Tex Russell, for two reasons: Tex used to be a whale against the Tigers, and Tex is in shape again. He was down to weight when he reported three weeks ago, and he has been working hard to get into perfect condition. Not only has he the old perfect control, but he seems to have recovered the hook, which eluded him most of the last two seasons.

Cicotte Is Second Choice.

If the honor is not assigned to Russell it is likely to go to Cicotte. Jim Scott would have been second choice to Russell if he had not been taken sick. It is doubtful if Faber will be in his best shape for the same reason.

Barring injuries, the Sox pilot will stand pat on the infield which has been working together well during most of the training trip, and if Schalk has more than one leg to stand on he will be behind the mask.

Going into the battle in their present condition, the White Sox ought to be favorites. There is no questioning the fact that they look like a better equipped outfit than last year, when they finished third after leading the race most of the first half. If Boston or Detroit, who beat out the Sox, have strengthened materially it has not shown in the advance dope.

Other Teams Strengthened.

Manager Jones is expected to make his combined Browns and Sloufeds a tough proposition. The rejuvenated Cleveland team will play with a different spirit and ought to be stronger with the material added last year. Baker will strengthen the attack of the Yankees, and the old fox, Connie Mack, always has to be reckoned with until his cards are on the table. But it is doubtful if any one of those four teams has increased its strength more than the White Sox have.

At present it looks as if Terry solved the infield problem because he is a strong defensive factor, playing his own position fast and steadily and working with Eddie Collins smoothly. Whether or not the youngster can hit major league pitching will not be known until he gets up against it, but he makes the pitcher pitch to him, and even if he does not hit .200 he will tighten up the left side of the infield, because Weaver plays better at third than he did at short.

Better Even Without Terry.

Even if Terry falls down on his assignment, Manager Rowland can make up a better infield than he had last year, for both Moriarity and McMullen can play third better than anything we saw in a Sox suit last year, and Fautsch may outshine Terry enough to win the regular shortstop berth.

Joe Jackson has acquired the White Sox spirit and is not only going after the batting championship with confidence but believes he is on a team of champions at last. Felsch has regained the batting stride out of which he was thrown last summer by an injured foot, and even if he fails to keep hitting there are John Collins and Murphy to round out a better outfield than that of a year ago now.

With Schalk, Lapp, and Lynn for catchers, the manager will have nothing to worry about, as was the case last season whenever Schalk got a bump.

If the veteran pitchers were in as good condition as last year the Sox ought to get the jump on the other fellows again and be able to hold it with their additional strength. But Jim Scott, who was figured as one of the old reliables, will not be ready for the start, and it is not believed Faber has got into top form in the short time since his sickness.

To offset that, Russell and Benz are better than a year ago, Cicotte is as good as ever, and there are several promising youngsters to help out. Danforth seems to be the pick of the two left handed rookies. Of the right handers, Eller and Galvin seem to have about equal chances to make the team.

Owing to the frigid weather encountered by the White Sox since leaving Texas, it has been impossible to keep them in the splendid physical condition they had attained or to begin using them in concert work.

RED SOX TRADE TRIS SPEAKER TO CLEVELAND

New York, April 8.—Tristam Speaker, one of the greatest outfielders in baseball and for the last two years the highest salaried player in the game, was traded today by the Boston Americans to the Cleveland club of the same league.

The deal, which was closed here by Manager William Carrigan of Boston and Robert McRoy of Cleveland, came after many rumors that the world's champions were to part with their brightest star, but nevertheless it caused considerable surprise. Speaker was one of the mainstays of the Boston club, both in fielding and batting, and contributed largely to the winning by his team of two world's series during his eight years with the Red Sox.

Two Indians in Trade.

In return for Speaker Boston will receive, Manager Carrigan said, two players, Pitcher S. P. Jones and another to be chosen later, and a cash consideration. The amount to be paid was not announced.

The release of Speaker is said to have been caused by inability to come to terms on the question of salary. Two years ago, when Speaker was eagerly sought by the Federals, he was given a contract for two years at a salary reputed to have been $18,500, the highest ever paid a ball player.

To close this deal Joseph J. Lannin, owner of the Red Sox, met Speaker at the dock upon his return from a trip around the world with the White Sox and Giants. At the passing away of the Federal league Lannin offered Speaker a contract for this year calling for a much smaller salary, said to be about $9,000. They failed to come to terms.

With Boston Since 1908.

Speaker is 32 years old. He went to Boston in 1908. With the exception of his first year, he batted for an average of .300 in the eight years he was with the Red Sox. His best year was 1912, when his average was .383. Last year he batted .322. He throws left handed.

Jones participated in forty-eight games for Cleveland last year, but was used chiefly as relief pitcher. He is credited with having won three and lost eight games. His batting average was .156.

Red Sox Get $90,000 Cash?

Boston, Mass., April 8.—The transaction today, by which Speaker goes to Cleveland ranks with the greatest financially in the history of the game. Although President Lannin of the Red Sox would not disclose the figures, information obtained here placed the amount of the cash consideration with the release value of the two players which Cleveland turns over to the Red Sox at approximately $20,000. In addition, the deal represents a saving of another $10,000 to the Boston club, the difference between the salary which Speaker sought and that which his successor will receive.

Clarence Walker, purchased a few days ago from the St. Louis Browns, will play center field for the Red Sox. With a batting record almost the equal of Speaker's and a strong throwing arm, the newcomer is expected by the management to go far toward filling Speaker's place. In fielding it is expected the ranging ability of Hooper and Lewis will be of assistance in covering the ground over which Speaker was master.

Cost Over $50,000, Says Dunn.

Cincinnati, O., April 8.—James Dunn, owner of the Cleveland Indians, today said that the price paid for Tris Speaker, star Red Sox center fielder, was over $50,000.

In the Wake of the News

by RING W. LARDNER

THE DIARY OF A SIREN.

APRIL 6.

I AM nearly heart broken, diary. Lennie is angry at me, though why I know not, and my girlish modesty will prevent me from writeing to find out. I am afraid all is over between us and all on account of a misunderstanding. Something I said in my last letter to him must of given him offense and wounded him deeply. Oh that I should be the one to wound him who I love above all else in the world.

I have read my letter that I wrote him over and over in the hopes of trying to discover what I said to hurt him. He had asked me to learn what Mr. Weeghman thought of him and it may have been my report in answer to that request that caused his anger though what Mr. Weeghman said seemed to me to be a high compliment but I know so little about baseball that I may be mistaken. What Mr. Weeghman said was that Lennie had the best control he ever saw in a left handed pitcher and that he hit those Philadelphia bats right in the middle and that he was so clever that he could learn nothing from either Mr. Tinker the captain or Mr. Brown the coacher. I am sure I quoted Mr. Weeghman correct but the incident has spoiled my life and shattered my fondest dreams.

Here is Lennie's cruel letter which I will never answer.

"Well Miss Smart I suppose you think you are mighty smart but you are not as smart as you think you are. You can tell Weeghman for me that I said he was a smart sleck and Tinker's another one and they can take there ball club and jump in the lake with it and if they dont like my work why dont they say so to my face and not say so behind my back and why dont they give me my release and let me go with a good ball club and you can tell him for me that his club will finish in the pennant race just like they finished against the Philadelphia club down in Tampa and if Tinker wins a ball game with that club he has got it will be because the umpire is his brother in law. The sooner they give me my release the better I will like it and I want you to be sure and tell that to Weeghman. I would tell it to Tinker only I am scared that if I spoke to him at all my temper would get the best of me and I would kill him. Be sure and tell Weeghman what I say to tell him.

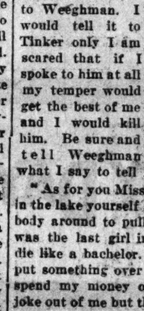
"As for you Miss Smart you can jump in the lake yourself and I hope theres nobody around to pull you out and if you was the last girl in the world I would die like a bachelor. You were trying to put something over on me and get me to spend my money on you and make a joke out of me but the joke is on you and you can take a jump in the lake. I dont have to stand for getting made a fool of by a girl like you and theres a dozen girls I can have if I want them and every one of them got you beat 40 ways.

"This will be all for you and me and dont write no letter to me because I wont open it and tell Weeghman the sooner he gives me my release the better I will like it. Be sure and tell him. Tell him I would bust him in the eye if I was there and its a good thing he is in Chicago and not where I can get him. Tell him that Miss Smart."

And he did not even sign the letter. Oh diary what have I done to deserve a broken heart and a spoiled life at my age. Would that my girlish modesty would allow me to write and ask for an explanation and tell him all that is in my heart but even if I did write he would not open the letter.

APRIL 7.

Another letter came from Lennie today. Just a note but maybe it means that he cannot bear the thought of giveing me up forever and that is why he wrote for there was really nothing important in the letter.



"Miss Smart." he wrote. "Never mind telling Weeghman those things I asked you to tell him. I had rather tell him myself and I will tell him as soon as I get a chance. Dont say nothing to him about what I said. I had rather tell him myself so dont say nothing about it. Be sure and not say nothing to Weeghman. I will tell him when I see him."

I would not of told Mr. Weeghman any way. But now I am afraid that Lennie will kill him when they meet and I would always feel that it was partly my fault.

SOX II. IDLE; TRY BOWLING

St. Joseph, Mo., April 8.—[Special.]—Today's postponement upset the pitching calculations of Manager Shano Collins of the Sox Yannigans. He had intended using Faber today and Benz tomorrow, reserving the recruit twirlers for the battle at Ottumwa.

As both of the veterans are expected to get nine innings of work each between now and Wednesday, Faber will twirl tomorrow and Benz at Ottumwa. This will leave Galvin and Clark to divide things at Rockford Tuesday.

All the Yens were disappointed because bad weather interfered with today's game. There were three inches of snow on the sidewalk at breakfast time. This cleared off, but the league grounds were soggy and the air as cold as early February.

Collins, Benz, and Faber had a special bowling match in the afternoon, each winning a game. High scores were: Faber, 166; Collins, 159, and Benz, 154. Those who have seen Benz pitch remember a particular revolving motion he makes with his arm before delivering the ball. He uses the same in bowling.

FIVE RUN RALLY AIDS ROWLANDS NIP MILLERS, 6-3

Minneapolis, Minn., April 8.—[Special.]—Cold weather, soggy ground, a field fringed with snow, and a good class A A team couldn't keep the White Sox from winning or put a stop to the long string of successes of Rowland's first team today. The Sox mauled R. Williams for four hits in the second inning, and the Millers had an erratic spell, booting the ball when the Sox weren't pelting to safe territory. This gave the big leaguers four runs—enough to win. The final score was 6 to 3.

Eller Starts Rally.

Hod Eller, pitcher, essayed the role of an outfielder and started the big rally of the Sox in the second inning. Smith kicked Terry's grounder and Russell beat out a hit, filling the sacks. Murphy and Collins poked out singles, R. Williams uncorked a wild heave, and Weaver and Jackson pulled off a double steal, giving the Sox three more runs.

Weaver doubled and scored in the fourth on an infield out by Jackson after advancing on Collins' safe bunt. Massey's homer over the right field wall, with one on, in the fifth, gave the Millers two runs. Acosta doubled in the sixth, advancing on Altizer's safe rap, and scored when Knight forced Dave at second.

Tex Preps for Opener.

Russell pitched seven innings and looked good to Manager Rowland. Claude Williams finished the game for the Sox and was a bit wild. He settled down after issuing passes in the eighth and ninth innings, and wasn't scored on. Score:

NOTES OF THE WHITE SOX.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 8.—[Special.]—Fast double plays by Eddie Collins and Terry were features of the game.

Weaver was sore after the game. He was hit twice by pitched balls.

The news that Speaker had been sold to Cleveland was a big surprise for the Sox.

Fournier went to first base in the seventh to limber his injured leg and Jackson went to left field.

Acosta was a tough man for the Sox pitchers when with Washington. He made a little trouble for Russell, getting a double to the right field fence.

The banquet to be given the Sox in Minneapolis was called off. It was organized for President Comiskey and Manager Rowland. The Sox president was compelled to send his regrets and Rowland isn't strong for banquets at this time of the year.

BAILEY IS SENT TO TOLEDO.

Bill Bailey of the Cub pitching staff was released last night to the Toledo club of the American association after a long distance telephone conversation between President Weeghman of the north side club and Manager Bresnahan of the Mudhens. Bailey, who is a southpaw, was one of Tinker's Federal league hurlers last season and was obtained from the Baltimore Feds, to whom he jumped from the International league the previous year.

Memphis Buys Pitcher Wright and Catcher Wallace—Too Cold to Play Game.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Memphis, Tenn., April 8.—[Special.]—Frigid weather, just like what comes off Lake Michigan and blows over Weeghman park in May, was on hand here to greet the Cubs today, so there wasn't any ball game. A heavy rain of last night aided in making the decision to call off the ball game.

As there was no news from the battlefield, Manager Tinker and Owner Watkins of the local club got together and fixed up a little deal whereby Catcher Jack Wallace and Pitcher Robert Wright, two Scotchmen, were transferred from the Cubs to the Memphis Turtles.

Weeghman Must O. K. Deal.

The deal was all arranged in the afternoon and a long distance call was put in for President Weeghman of the Cubs to get his indorsement of the transfer before it finally was closed. Weeghman acquiesced when an option string was attached to the players.

Young Wallace, according to the players of the Cub Colts, has shown surprising ability in the exhibition games played port. The same is true regarding Wright, who has a great curve ball, but little chance to take a turn on the slab for the Cubs this season because of the presence of so many stars.

Memphis Can't Use Allison.

It was expected that Outfielder Pete Allison also would be left here, but the local club owner declared there was no room for him. Pete Knisely, the former Cub, is playing one of the outer gardens here and driving the ball to the fence quite regularly. "There is a price here of an automobile for the best ball player on the team," said Knisely, "and just watch me go out and win that old car."

The Cub regulars arrived this morning soon after Rollie Zeider and his Colts had come over from Little Rock. It was supposed that quite a shakeup would be made on the squad, but the only announcement was that Wright and Wallace would be left here after the Colts have played the Turtles tomorrow.

Regulars at Louisville Today.

The Regulars left tonight for Louisville to open a three days' engagement tomorrow. All the second squad fellows will join the Regulars there except Prendergast, Bailey, and Pechous, who were transported to Chicago tonight to work out on the home grounds until the team gets home.

NATIONAL AMATEUR LEAGUE CREATES A NEW OFFICE.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 8.—Ralston Goss, president of the National Amateur Baseball Association of America, tonight announced a change in the constitution and bylaws to permit a more centralized form of government. A proposition to amend the constitution to provide for an additional officer was approved by mail vote. It provided for the separation of the office of secretary-treasurer. Tom Jones of Indianapolis was elected secretary. E. C. Seaton of Chicago, who has served in the capacity of secretary-treasurer for the last two years, resigned and was elected treasurer of the organization. President Goss has also appointed Seaton chairman of a committee on publicity and expansion.

EVANSTON ACADEMY WINS.

Cold weather held the Evanston academy-Lake View High school ball game to five innings yesterday, but the Purple preps had plenty of opportunity to display their batting prowess, winning, 16 to 4. The game was played at Northwestern field. The winners combined hits with walks and profited by errors of the high schoolers, scoring in every inning. They tallied eight times in the second. All of Lake View's runs were made in the fifth. Score:

VOCAL ARTILLERY

Rowland and Tinker Confident Before Charge Against Trenches of Enemy.

BY CLARENCE H. ROWLAND.

SPEAKING for the White Sox, there isn't any team in the American league with whom we would trade our chances for the pennant, and we reason it out this way:

We have certainly strengthened our team in more ways than one, as I shall try to show later. We cannot figure Boston and Detroit, the two acknowledged contenders, any stronger than last year, nor does it look as if Washington would be any harder to beat. St. Louis, Cleveland, and New York will be tougher propositions. Philadelphia is the only unknown quantity and the Athletics are an absolutely unknown factor. The White Sox, being the only first division team to strengthen materially, ought to have the best chance for the pennant.

It stands to reason that the second division teams, although admittedly stronger, will have to improve a lot to beat out the White Sox with the added power we have.

Our infield will be stronger with Terry at short, leaving Weaver free to plug airtight the hole at third base. It may sound unreasonable to expect anything better than the best, but I look for Eddie Collins to outdo even last year's work because he will be more familiar with his surroundings. Fournier will be a whole year's experience better on first.

Lapp and Lynn added to the catching staff make our reserve strength much greater and the two left handers, Danforth and Williams, round out an already grand pitching corps. The outfield will be stronger because Felsch will have had another year's experience and Jackson was with us last fall only long enough to get well acquainted.

That reminds me of another point in our favor. Most of the men have now played together long enough to know each other's style perfectly, while last year there were many new parts in the machine.

We expect a tougher, closer fight this year, but, honestly, we cannot figure any team's chances better than ours.

BY CHARLES A. COMISKEY.

After looking the White Sox over at their training quarters I am convinced that, barring accidents, Manager Rowland will have his club in the championship fight from the drop of the flag, and I hope that the White Sox will be successful in bringing back to its loyal fans the American league, and, subsequently, the world's, championship.

BY B. B. JOHNSON.

There is every indication that the American league's championship season which opens next Wednesday will be one of the greatest if not the greatest in its history.

With the wealth of new material that has been selected by the eight club owners there is bound to result an elevation of the standard of sport and the reports from the different training camps forecast much improvement in the weaker teams of last season.

This will insure a closer race for the pennant, and while it is extravagant to hope for a more bitter contest than that of 1908, when the championship was not decided until the last day of the season, it would not surprise me if the coming race should approach it closely in intensity of interest.

With every opportunity to maintain discipline and the true spirit of clean sport, the American league can assure its patrons a splendid season's entertainment.

BY JOE TINKER.

The Cubs didn't do as well in the exhibition games as I had hoped, but I am not discouraged over anything which happened on the training trip. I had a combination of men who were strange to one another, and it takes time to construct a machine out of such material, no matter if there are many stars in the lot. The machine will be there in time, and I think quickly enough to keep in the fight for the pennant.

I look for the greatest season of baseball since 1908, when there were close races in each league. The weaker clubs of the National league have strengthened. It looks to me now as if the Phillies and Braves will be the hardest teams for us to beat. However, I have seen little of the National league in the last two years.

McGraw should have a much improved team in New York, and the race may develop into another battle between Chicago and New York such as we used to have. If McGraw develops pitching strength he is sure to be up there. He has a wonderful set of outfielders and a great batting and base running club.

The Cubs need only a few more practice games to perfect themselves for the race. I have three or four pitchers in fine shape for the start, and that is all needed at one time.

BY CHARLES H. WEEGHMAN.

As the start of the National league pennant race approaches I am more satisfied than ever that Chicago's Cubs will be in the battle for the flag from start to finish. I am even optimistic enough to predict the return of those good old days when Frank Chance was leading his famous machine to pennant after pennant.

Our team, on paper, looks at least as strong as any National league combination. Manager Tinker already has proved himself a baseball general of the first rank, and he can be trusted to keep his men stepping at top speed every minute of every game during the season.

Pre-season dope indicates the White Sox have a mighty good chance for the title in the American league, and Chicago fandom may be treated to another battle between its two clubs for the world's baseball championship.

BY JOHN K. TENER.

There is evidence on every hand that 1916 will prove a banner year in baseball. I have heard more baseball talked and more genuine interest displayed in the game this spring by men in all walks of life than at any time since I have been connected officially with the National league.

This fact leads me to believe that nothing can possibly militate against the season's splendid prospect save an international war in which our country might be seriously menaced by invasion.

More minor leagues are already organized and ready to take the field than at any time during the last three years. In my judgment this is a true index to the general widespread interest in the game.

The clubs in the major leagues have been strengthened and the playing ability seems well balanced. Every one of the teams training in the south enjoyed splendid weather and obtained the utmost results from their preliminary work, so that all will begin the season in good shape unless they suffer serious setback by cold weather in the north.

Speaking particularly for the National league, I would state that it looks forward to and hopes for another very close race for the pennant and starts the season with the brightest of prospects.

Athletics' Spring Trip Stopped.

Richmond, Va., April 8.—The Athletics' barnstorming trip from the training camp at Jacksonville came to an abrupt ending today when the game scheduled with the Richmond Internationals for this afternoon and tomorrow's game at Baltimore were called off on account of a severe storm. They left for Philadelphia this afternoon.

Wichita Drops Grid Star.

Wichita, Kas., April 8.—Guy Chamberlain, end on the Nebraska university football team who was signed by Wichita of the Western league as a pitcher, has been released. Pitchers Geist, Lang, and Brinley, Catchers Noyes and Buster, and Infielders Blue and Thompson also have been released. Blue goes to Wheeling, W. Va.

EIGHT CONTESTS BILLED TODAY BY SEMI-PRO NINES

Normals and Eclipses of City League Will Clash in Pre-Schedule Game.

Semi-pro baseball players will tilt the 1916 lid a trifle higher today, eight games being billed for this afternoon. The feature will be the appearance of two City league clubs in action for the first time. The Normals and Eclipse slipped one over on the other magnates by booking an exhibition game at Roseland.

The City league still has three weeks before the schedule starts and today's game at Roseland will not affect the schedule. It will serve to give the fans a line on the strength of Gene Vollmar's club as compared with one of the strongest teams on the local circuit. Max Fisk will pitch for the Roselands and Cy Young for the Normal team.

Wiederrechts Now Rex Tigers.

Fans figure that the White Giants will have a hard time making it three straight in their pennant hunts, as the Wiederrechts, who won the Sweitzer cup last fall in competition with the largest number of clubs that ever contested for a trophy, are in the league this year under the name of the Rex Tigers. The club will play at Fairchild's park, Forty-second and Chicago avenues, under the joint management of Bryant Pierce of Tiger fame and Art Koster, who handled the Wiederrechts in their successful campaign last year.

One of the strongest of the new teams promises to be the Merrimacs, who have represented Our Lady of Sorrows church in many amateur contests in the past. The Merrimacs have built a new park at Kedzie avenue and Van Buren street which will seat 2,500 fans. Dick Cantwell who made good in the Western league last year but is best remembered for sensational high school work here, will pitch for the club, with Earl Dennis catching. Ralph Carroll is manager.

Catholic League Enlarged.

Nineteen new teams have signed to make the race for the pennant in the National Catholic league. Two more joined at last week's meeting. The league will contest for the most valuable trophy ever hung up for amateur competition, the main trophy being twenty-four inches high.

Semi-pro baseball games scheduled this afternoon follow:

Normals and Eclipse at Roseland.
Universal Billiards and SS. Peter and Pauls at Thirty-eighth and Paulina.
Gunthers and Chicago Union Giants at Milwaukee and Sawyer.
I. P. C. and Chicago Black Sox at De Paul field.
The Hub and Merrimacs at Kedzie and Van Buren.
G. & G. and Stanton Parks at Stanton park.
M. & M. Bourbons and Billikens at Norwood park.
Blooms and Rothschilds at Milwaukee and Linden.

PRACTICE GAMES FOR INTERCITY

The Intercity Baseball association will open its fifteenth year today with practice games at almost every park. One big game is to be played at Logan Square park, Milwaukee and Sawyer avenues. The city champion Gunthers will meet the Chicago Union Giants. Jimmy Hutton, new manager of the champs, has secured one of the best lineups the club has had for years.

Eddie Stack, ex-Cub, will pitch. Joe Delaney, one of the best of the local catchers, will be behind the bat. Hutton will play first, Stock second, Leo Kavanaugh, former Federal leaguer, will play short, and Billy Foley will hold down third base. Joe Dunbar, the giant outfielder of the Sheboygan club, and Regan and Bjion, both from Notre Dame, will play the outfield.

The South Chicago club will be under new management, Warren Hill taking hold. He has started out to sign up a team that will make the rolling mill famous. He has signed Criss, star pitcher of the Rosland team.

The Garden City club has enlarged and remodeled the old Tiger park at Lake street and Kilpatrick avenue, and secured Billy Niesen, former owner of the Gunthers. The club will open next Sunday with the Waukegan team. Niesen has signed Spencer Heath. Tom Asmussen will catch. Brennan on first and Artie Moore on second are two former Tigers. Weisner will play short and Thuemling will be at third base. The outfield will have Silk Kavanaugh, Jones, and Bobbie Madigan.

The old Logan Square grounds, at Milwaukee and Sawyer avenues, will be the home of a new club to be known as the Logan Squares and managed by John Callahan.

Lieut. Kenny, manager of the United States army team, has been compelled to send his ball players out scouting for soldiers and will not be able to put his club in the field until Villa is caught.

Richmond, Va., April 8.—Today's exhibition game between the Philadelphia Athletics and Richmond Internationals was called off on account of cold weather and Mack's team proceeded north, canceling the remaining game of the spring tour.

BABY SMITH, 255, OUT AS PITCHER ON PURPLE NINE

BY EVAN STONE.

Wee Willie McGill, who is holding the coaching reins of the Purple baseball chariot, is dividing his time between drilling some twenty-two athletes and courting the weather man. Cold winds from Lake Michigan have kept McGill's candidates from outdoor practice. Friday Wee Willie took a chance against La Grange High school, and after four innings cold entertainment retired to the field house to thaw out.

The Purple scored fifteen runs and the high school boys two. The feature of the occasion was the debut of "Baby" Smith, the champion 255 pound football center, as a pitcher. The "Baby" showed great promise and, according to McGill, shows form in fielding his position.

Pitching Staff Not Complete.

Candidates for positions are not so plentiful as Coach McGill would wish, and some of the men reported late. The Purple coach is particularly worried over the pitching staff, or lack of a staff, as none of the candidates has been out long enough for Wee to get a line on his full strength. Besides Smith, the prospects are Hern, Newby, Highland, Olson, and McCurdy. With a spell of warm weather, however, Wee hopes to round his twirlers into form so that he can pick out the artists who will carry the Purple baseball burden.

If the pitchers come through Wee Willie believes that he will have a team of pennant contenders. The infield, with Capt. Quigley at first, "Pattie" Driscoll at second, Foley at third, and Alexander at short, is accounted the best Northwestern has seen in years.

Good Men in Outfield.

Ellingwood is expected to make good in the outfield, with Peterson, Lutz, and Greenbaum as other men seeking jobs in the garden. Fisher, from the dental school, has made a promising bid as catcher, and probably will fill the position acceptably, with Arries and Hornbeck as understudies.

Northwestern will begin the conference season at Bloomington against Indiana Friday.

Buy a Saxon Automobile on Installments

Saxon "Six"—$815.00

Don't Envy the Automobile Owner—Be One!

If you've been telling yourself all along that you can't afford an automobile and yet wishing with all your heart that you had one—then you are making a big mistake. For you CAN HAVE a big, fine, top quality motor car that will cost you but a little at a time to buy and but a small amount to operate.

Now, for instance, if you are a city salesman or a solicitor, then certainly a good automobile like the Saxon "Six" is an investment that YOU SIMPLY CAN'T AFFORD TO OVERLOOK. Many a salesman has turned FAILURE into SUCCESS by using an automobile to double his calling radius, speed up his number of calls and thereby add to his earning capacity.

On the other hand, if you are a married man with a nice family you think a lot of, then you ought to have an automobile because of what it will do for them. If you are one of the many men who spend a great portion of every day in an office, just get your pencil out and figure up the added health and joy you and yours will get out of a Saxon "Six."

Think of inhaling the fresh, brisk air for an hour or two each evening or on a sunny Sunday afternoon. Think of all the trips—all the big and little jaunts—you can take on holidays and week-ends. Think of all the varied pleasures and privileges you've denied yourself so long—then come in and have a Saxon demonstration.

We're more than willing to meet you half way if you are sincere—and we'll help you buy the car. HERE'S OUR PLAN:

Saxon Four - - - - - - - - - - - - $395.00

GOLFER OR CLUB RESPONSIBLE IF CADDIE IS HURT?

Suit in East Raises Question Never Decided in Court Fight.

BY J. G. DAVIS.

If, Mr. Golfer, by a misguided slice you should "bean" a caddie on an adjoining course, or if some well directed shot from your club should inflict injury on the anatomy of a club toter, are you responsible for damages or is the club to which you belong?

So far as is known, no suit ever has been brought on a case of this kind in Illinois, but at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., a boy who was hit brought suit for $10,000 and the president of the club wrote to a number of clubs in various parts of the country seeking information. In this manner the matter was brought to the attention of former Judge Frederick L. Fake, who has sought opinions from golfing lawyers. They differ.

Law Doesn't Cover Caddies.

The case at Saratoga Springs was settled out of court, affording no precedent. Attorney Fake finds that the employers' liability act, which applies only to employes engaged in certain acts, does not cover that of caddying, and, in order to make this occupation effective under the workmen's compensation act, application would have to be made to the industrial board of Illinois.

Even then it is not certain whether the business of caddying would be included as an occupation to which the employers' liability act might apply.

Any employer has a right to take advantage of the act, but under present conditions it would not apply and the injured party would have to sue under the common law, making the hitter responsible for the injury.

Insurance Protects Clubs.

Several Chicago clubs appear to have protected themselves by taking out a policy issued by one insurance company which insures against losses of this character. Damages of this kind involve a number of fine points of law, including contributory negligence and the assumption of risk by the caddy.

President Dennis F. Kelly of the Chicago District Golf association, whose organization was formed primarily to uplift the caddies, said yesterday that he did not believe it would be wise to have this class of occupation included in the employers' liability act. He believes any player who caused injury to a boy would make reparation, and that in most cases where injuries have been inflicted this had been done.

Protest Dangerous Spots.

Now that the point had been raised, Kelly thought it an opportune time to call the attention of all clubs to the necessity of safeguarding both members and caddies by protecting dangerous spots. This was more essential on public courses, where unskillful players frequently endanger players on adjoining fair greens by wild shots from the tee.

Mr. Fake said the majority of the men with whom he had conferred believed it would be advisable to have some understanding that would safeguard both the interests of the clubs and those of the caddies, and in this idea President Kelly concurred.

"Safety First" for Good Golfers.

A good golfer is as careful with the golf clubs as a trapshooter is with his gun. There are others who need a "safety first" sign tacked on each tee box and others nailed to trees.

Now, Mr. Golfer, it is up to you. While there is some doubt as to the responsibility of your club, the consensus of opinion of the golfing lawyers seems to be that the major part of the responsibility rests with yourself.

CARTER WINS NORTH AND SOUTH GOLF TOURNAMENT.

Pinehurst, N. C., April 8.—Philip Carter of New York, Metropolitan amateur champion, won the north and south amateur golf championship today, defeating Frank Dyer of Montclair, 5 and 3, in the thirty-six hole final.

The match was all even at the ninth hole, but Carter was two up at the eighteenth hole. Dyer recovered, and it was all even again on the twenty-second green. Carter then won five holes in succession and was five up on the twenty-seventh. He was three up at the thirtieth, and five up when the game ended on the thirty-third green. The round was played out, Carter finishing the thirty-six holes in 140, equaling the No. 2 course record in both rounds. The cards:

Carter, out	6	3	4	4	5	3	6	5	5—34
Dyer, out	5	5	4	4	5	3	7	5	5—38
Carter, in	4	5	5	4	4	7	4	4	4—36—70
Dyer, in	5	5	4	5	5	3	6	3	5—39—74

Second round:

Carter, out	5	4	4	5	4	3	5	3	5—38
Dyer, out	5	4	5	4	5	3	6	4	5—39
Carter, in	4	5	4	4	4	3	4	3	5—36—74

West secured nine tricks.

West realized that game was impossible unless he secured at least one trick in the heart suit. As the play progressed the situation became worse, until at trick six, with a tenace in hearts still marked in the south hand and only one re-entry in dummy, the situation became hopeless.

By finessing the diamond west secured an extra card of reentry for dummy, and with no reentry south succumbed to the temptation of making his good heart at trick eight.

North played so high on the first lead of clubs that south placed the king of that suit with north and felt safe in making his heart trick in the hope of defeating the contract. Also, as he confessed afterwards, he thought west was under the impression the seven of hearts was high when leading it. Few games have been won against so bad a distribution of cards.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

Chicago.—[To the Editor.]—1. As last trick is played it is found dealer and dummy have correct number of cards, but one opponent has only twelve cards and the other fourteen cards. Does the deal stand? 2. What happens if dealer has fourteen cards and dummy only twelve? 3. After hand is partially played, the player of declaration says: "I can take all the rest." Can he be compelled to place his remaining cards face up on table and not take any finesse previously found to be a winner? 4. The dealer says: "I bid one club," and immediately, before any other declarations, says, "No, I mean one spade." Is he allowed to change? 5. Where can I get a book with the latest rules on bridge?

H. A. S.

Answer—1 and 2. If before, during, or at the conclusion of play one player holds more than the proper number of cards, and another less, the deal is void. 3. The declarer may be required to place his cards, face upward, on the table. He is not then allowed to take any finesse not previously proved a winner, unless he announce it when making his claim. 4. Yes. 5. Any good book store.

Chicago.—[To the Editor.]—Like to ask you a information about a Pinochle Game of Cards. If a man has to Lay down 8 kings in order to Count 800 Hundred Points. Can a man melt 20 in Spaits and than Drawing more Cards Queen of Spaits and 2 Jacks of Diamond and melt 300 Hundret out of it or only 40 and 40?

St. P.

Answer—Yes, to all your questions. The count would be 800 for double pinochle under the German system, which you are using.

Chicago.—[To the Editor.]—Should there not be a penalty for such remarks as these: "Oh, partner, why didn't you lead my suit? You surely knew I wanted a finesse over dummy," when he went on with the no trump, after I had given two hearts?

B. K. C.

Answer—Under law 93 the declarer may call a suit from the adversary whose next turn it is to lead.

PULLMAN VS. ROVERS IN FEATURE SOCCER LEAGUE GAME TODAY

Although the Pullman soccer team which next Sunday will meet the Bethlehem Steel team in the semi-final round of the national amateur championships was originally scheduled for a bye, the car builders will today meet the Campbell Rovers in a local league match at Fifty-second avenue and Madison street.

The switch was made by officials of the Chicago District league, and will give Pullman a stiff workout for the big game next Sunday, as the Rovers are stronger than at any time this season. The only other first division game carded this afternoon is Chicago Americans and McDuffs at Forty-second and Chicago avenues.

Games This Afternoon.

Other league matches today:

Second division—Kenwood and Lincoln park at Twenty-sixth street and Kostner avenue; Corinthians at International Harvesters, Forty-eighth avenue and Sixteenth street; Chicago Swedish at Caledonians.

Third division—Washington park at Palmer park; Cambridge United at Lake Forest; Frams at Harvey; Hawthorne at Chicago Screws.

Fourth division—Chicago Hungarians at Chicago Swedish II.; Cechie at Burnside; Olympia at Mohawk; Paramount at Calumet park.

Fifth division—Bohemians at Laburnum; Praha at Union; Primrose at Setlara; American Hungarians at Slavia.

College League Planned.

Archibald Paterson, who started soccer football at Englewood High school, has taken the initial steps in the formation of a college league. Invitations for a meeting to be held Tuesday night at the Mystic A. C. have been sent to the University of Chicago, Northwestern university, University of Illinois, McCormick seminary, Elmhurst college, Armour institute, Lewis Institute, and the Chicago High School Alumni club.

It is proposed to run a tournament every fall along lines similar to those used by the eastern universities. Several of the local institutions have played occasional games during the last few years, but this will be the first attempt to arrange a regular series.

West vs. East Next Week.

Great interest is being shown by local soccer fans in the meeting of Pullman-Bethlehem Steel semi-final contest in the national amateur championship race at Fifty-second street and Cottage Grove avenue next Sunday. It will be the first time in the history of soccer football that a semi-final match has been played here, and will be the first really representative test between eastern and western teams.

LOUISIANA COLLEGE NINE UPSETS ILLINI AGAIN, 4-3.

Baton Rouge, La., April 8.—[Special.]—Bunched hits off Gunkle in the first and seventh innings gave Louisiana State university its second straight victory over the University of Illinois today, 4 to 3. This game ended the southern tour of the Illini, who immediately caught a train for Champaign. Score:

IRISH SUPREME ON THE GRIDIRON, DECLARES STAGG

Anglo-Saxons Surpass Players of Other Nations, with the Sons of Erin Best.

Athletes of Irish descent make the best natural football players, according to Coach A. A. Stagg of the University of Chicago, who expresses the opinion after twenty years of observation. The Maroon mentor was one of the speakers at the dinner of the Irish Fellowship club at the Hotel La Salle yesterday, and he commented on the types of players whom he has watched and drilled.

The Americanization of German boys makes them valuable as gridiron material, the "Old Man" declared, but he stated that without going through some sort of enlivening process they are not likely to display aggressive work. When Scandinavian players show adaptability they make stars, but they are not inclined to mix things like the Irish, Stagg said.

Says Irishman Is King.

"The English, Scotch, and Irish are supreme as football men, but the Irishman is best of all. He has the best traits for football because he takes to fight like a duck to water. The men of the Anglo-Saxon race stand out in contrast to the Teuton and Scandinavian, but the Irishman is king of them all.

"The Teuton as he comes to us is good material, but he is of solid and stolid nature, without great imagination and lacking initiative. When he becomes Americanized he grows to be some of the best material I have worked with."

Does Not Need Developing.

Coach Stagg said the Irish does not need the developing of the other races and that the Irishman straight from the sod is fine timber from which to build a team.

A Family Title Combat.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 8.—Aronson is still handball champion of the University of Minnesota. In the title game today Abe Aronson defeated his brother, Sam Aronson, 21 to 19 and 21 to 15.

NOTES OF THE GOLFERS

Chilly weather kept the crowd of golfers at the big course at Jackson park down to about 200.

Play for the Chicago championship will be staged Aug. 7 to 12 over the Jackson park course.

Midlothian golfers will start play next Saturday, the event being the first of a series to determine handicaps.

The Exmoor Country club will hold its invitation tournament July 18 to 15, and the Westmoreland Country club has set July 19 to 22 for its event.

Members of the Calumet Country club today will visit one of their prospective sites for a new course. It is located near Parsons, on the South Shore electric line. The train will leave Randolph street at 12:20 o'clock, stopping at Van Buren, Park Row, Forty-third street, Fifty-third street, Sixty-third street, and Burnside. The club will start the season next Saturday with the qualifying round of the annual tournament over the "ridge" course.

AMATEUR PILOTS PRACTICE TODAY

As chilling winds hold no terrors for aspirants for amateur speed laurels, David F. Reid, president of the Speedway Park association, announced yesterday that practice for the nonprofessional race of May 20 would be held on the Maywood course this afternoon, even should the temperature flirt with the zero mark. Admittance to the speedway will be restricted to the members of the association, their families and guests. The latter must show visitors' cards to the gateman.

In addition to opening the course for practice, the officials plan to stage several short races this afternoon similar to the informal six mile event that featured last Sunday's workout.

In tuning up his eight cylinder Cadillac at the speedway yesterday, Frank Warren covered thirty-six miles in twenty-nine minutes and one second, an average of seventy-four miles an hour.

RUNS 100 DASH IN :09 4-5.

Austin, Tex., April 8.—Frame of the University of Texas equaled the Texas collegiate record of :09 4-5 for the 100 yard dash in a triple meet today. He was favored by a good wind. Texas won the meet with 78 points; Texas A. and M. was second with 34½, and Rice institute was third with 13½ counters. Unseasonably cold weather handicapped entrants.

Harvard and Yale Fencers Win.

Boston, Mass., April 8.—Harvard and Yale fencing teams earned the right to enter the intercollegiate championship fencing tournament in New York later in the month by eliminating Bowdoin in preliminary matches tonight. Harvard defeated Yale, 6 points to 3, and won all the bouts with Bowdoin. Yale defeated Bowdoin, 7 to 2.

C. A. A. ATHLETES VICTORS IN MEET; SECOND TO I. A. C.

Cherry Circle Runs Away with Honors—Goelitn Sets Hurdle Mark.

BY WALTER H. ECKERSALL.

Chicago Athletic association, athletes ran away with the honors in the annual Central A. A. U. indoor track meet in Northwestern university gymnasium last night. Early in the meet the Illinois Athletic club contestants gave their rivals a run, but after the fourth event the C. A. A. left the remainder of the field in the lurch.

In the first nine contests the Cherry circle athletes scored in all but the mile run. Harry Goelitz came to the front with a new Central A. A. U. record when he leaped the fifty yard hurdles in :06 4-5, one-fifth of a second better than the former mark.

The best race of the night was in the half mile run, which was won by Ivan Meyers of the I. A. C., who defeated Earl Eby of the C. A. A. by less than a foot. Meyers led until the final gun lap, when Eby jumped him, but Earl was unable to hold his lead and Meyers nipped him at the finish.

Meyers Beats Ray in Mile.

The first upset of the meet occurred in the mile run, when Ivan Meyers of the Illinois A. C., formerly of De Pauw university, defeated Joie Ray of the same club, winner of many national championships. Meyers jumped his opponent on next to the last lap and won by fifteen yards. Marceau of the C. A. A. finished third, Tenney, who competed unattached, was fourth.

With a put of 46 ft. 9½ in., Arlie Mucks of the University of Wisconsin won the shot put. The Badger was the class of the field and if extended could have improved his mark.

J. Loomis of the C. A. A. sprinted to victory in the open 50 yard dash. He beat Sol Butler, the Negro dash man, to the tape by a yard. The Cherry Circle star got away to a good start.

HELD OUT A BATH!

Faro Bank Player Runs Up $2.50 to $1,000 and Loses It Again, but Is Satisfied.

BILLY BOND was a sport around town whom probably many of the old timers remember. He was an inveterate faro bank fiend, and never being satisfied with moderate winnings was in consequence almost constantly in a chronic state of bankruptcy.

Bond was in that unpleasant condition one night idly standing around in Tom Hines' old place at 119 Dearborn street watching Pat Sheedy, the noted sporting man, betting them high and careless. The latter, noting the forlorn look on Billy's countenance, tossed him two red checks ($2.50) and bade him go and see what he could do for himself.

Billy manipulated the chips to such good advantage that he cashed in $1,000.

Having foregone the luxury of a Turkish bath for some time, due to a depleted exchequer, he strolled over to the Palmer house and negotiated for one. Having with evident enjoyment assimilated all the ramifications pertaining to a bath of this kind, he retired to his cot and slept until late the next day.

On arising, much refreshed, the momentous question presented itself, what to do with his money. Of course there was only one answer. There was nothing a man with $1,000 could do except play the "bank." So back to Hines' he went.

Arriving just in time to partake of the excellent dinner that the house served its patrons nightly free of charge, Bond satisfied his inner man and then sat down at the faro table to renew his struggle with the "tiger." After "bucking" that vicious animal for several hours with varying success, first up and then down, he finally arose cleaned of his last penny just as Sheedy stepped up.

"What," the latter hailed him, "did you let them get all that dough back again, kid?"

"No, not all of it," replied Billy.

"O, you saved some. How much?" questioned Pat.

BY SAM SUMMERFIELD.

"I held out a Turkish bath on 'em!" responded the unlucky player, grimly.

FOUR ACES.

Close onto forty years ago there was a saloon on Milwaukee avenue near Noble street, on the windows of which was painted in bright green letters, "Mike Clark, proprietor."

Despite this Hibernian patronymic, the owner was one of the sons of Abraham and the large majority of his patrons were of the same race.

As previously mentioned in these articles, poker in those days was considered a pastime and not a common game of chance, to be suppressed and eliminated by argus-eyed policemen.

In consequence, a poker game was in progress every evening at each of the dozen tables that lined one side of the room.

One of these was reserved for a little clique of elderly men who nightly played quarter limit among themselves, outsiders, especially the younger set, being rigidly excluded. The game was old-fashioned poker, ante ahead of the deal. If all passed, a jackpot was made, or if but one stayed the ante man could put up for him and force a jackpot.

"Texas" Phillips, having had several good hands beaten, and thinking it might change his luck, made an excuse to leave the room and invited Dave Getz to pick up a few hands for him during his absence.

When it came Dave's deal a fight started at the bar, and while all eyes were turned that way he deftly substituted another deck for the original one. When the hands were dealt out, Gluby, the tailor, whose ante it was, and Solomon Zuckerman, the potato peddler, each received four aces and a king.

As straights were not played in that game, each held an invincible hand. Every one passed except Zuckerman, who tossed a dime with Gluby's nickel.

"I tink I shtay," he remarked artlessly.

"Ach, less make it a chackpot," cunningly insinuated the ante man.

"Or ya put up for me."

"I vouldn't do dat."

"Vell, den I don't make it."

"Vell, uff ya don't I muss raise ya fifteen cends."

"So-o! Vell, I raise ya beck a dusher."

"Ah, blumin'! I raise you a drusher."

"Undt anodder one from me."

After that raise followed raise with cyclonic rapidity until all of Zuckerman's checks and available cash reposed in the center of the table.

Folding his cards close to his chest, he turned to the man behind the bar.

"Clark," he wheedled, "please lemme take fife dollars."

Clark scowled fiercely.

"Are you crazy?" he growled. "I vouldn't let my brudder take fife dollars."

"Please, please!" pleaded the other. "I pay you sure. I pay ya off I haf to sell my shildren to do it."

"Vat do I vant vit yer shildren," retorted the saloonkeeper angrily. "I vouldn't lend nobuddy fife dollars eff dey gafe me a first mortgach on a house an' lot."

"Vell, den, please come ofer here fer a minnit," despairingly wailed the peddler, "an' den eff ya don't vant to don't."

Reluctantly Clark approached, and as the player cautiously unfolded his unbeatable hand his eyes fairly popped out of his head.

"How much you said you vant?" he asked, trying to speak unconcernedly.

"Fife dollars."

"Aw right," extracting a large roll of bills from a pocket; "ya better take ten. Here's twenty."

AMATEURS FILE 169 BLANKS FOR 'TRIBUNE' TESTS

Entries Nearing 1915 Record; Full Details of Baseball Tryouts This Week.

BY OTTO A. ENGEL.

Almost half as many players as were entered in last year's tournament already have sent in application blanks for the second annual amateur baseball contest under the auspices of THE TRIBUNE. Prizes to the two successful winners will be trips with the Cubs and White Sox. With the completion of the second week for filing nominations, 169 ambitious youngsters have been listed. The total for the week was eighty-seven, while the aggregate of last week was ninety-two.

Next week complete announcement of the time when the entries close, the names of the judges, and the time of the tryouts will be published. As the youngsters will make the second eastern swing of the circuit with the local major league clubs, instead of the final, as was the case last season, the tryouts will start earlier, and naturally the closing of the entry list also will be earlier.

Must Observe Age Limit.

So it is up to you to get busy at once. Clip the entry blank, fill it out properly and legibly, and then send it to the Amateur Baseball editor. If you are over 21 years of age at this time you will not qualify, as the purpose of the contests is to give the prairie and semi-pro youngster a chance. Several blanks received during the week showed that some of the applicants were over age, and of course they could not be considered.

That there is more interest in the contest this year than last is shown by several letters received. Here is one:

Amateur Baseball Editor—Find inclosed my application for "The Tribune" tryouts. I played in the contest last year and considered it well worth my effort. I am enthusiastic about it this year and believe the present contest will far exceed the conservative estimates. I hope through this contest to get a chance to play professional ball, as I need the money to pay school expenses. Yours very truly,

GEORGE M. HIGHS.

Here's another:

Amateur Baseball Editor: I wish to state that I took part in the contest last year and was well pleased with the way they treated me and every one of us. Although I did not make good, "I think the experience was more than worth while. I have another thing to say: The boys were all strangers to each other, but they made friends in a hurry. Each was giving the other pointers about his play and there wasn't any serious jealousy about these cute teams. Although I was a failure last season, I will try harder this year. Yours very truly,

EDMONAL.

Passing of Ad Wolgast Brings Rise of Hammer.

BY RAY C. PEARSON.

When Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, left the ring of the Lakeside autditorium at Racine, Wis., a few nights ago after taking a beating from Ever Hammer of Chicago in ten rounds of tough milling a dark skinned trainer of boxers standing in the doorway remarked:

"He was a good ole boss, but he's done run his race."

How near that remark came to hitting the mark was realized by almost every person who occupied a ringside seat. The Michigan bearcat took a beating that few other fighters could or would have weathered. He took wallops on the jaw and wallops to the midsection which carried all the force that Hammer could put behind them. Those punches did not stop Wolgast; they slowed him up to a standstill and forced him to go into a shell to protect himself as much as was possible.

Ad Puts Up Weird Fight.

In the matter of attack the former champion and idol of every Wisconsin ringsider was a rank in and outer. His performance was weird, if that term could be fitted to the case. Ad's condition was far from what it should have been. He figured that the kid Hammer, a boy just turning 21 years, would not be hard picking, and accordingly he avoided the drudging work of training. One of those who is close to Wolgast confided at the ringside that the extent of Ad's training in the gymnasium was three days. Wolgast's pudgy waistline told the story plainly enough, but his fighting was better evidence of his lack of condition.

To last ten rounds against such a rugged, tough scrapper as Hammer Wolgast had to do a lot of thinking and put those thoughts into execution. The punishment he took in the first round, when his left eye was punched into mourning and his nose was cut and bleeding, would have stopped a lot of fighters. But Ad seldom made an effort to retaliate and simply stood the gaff and bided his time.

Grunts with Each Wallop.

When the second round opened Wolgast started to get into the running by returning the fire shot at him by Hammer. The best that could be said for Ad was that he did better than in the opening session. It was at this stage of the game that it became evident to the wise birds that the former champion had been doping things out for himself.

Wolgast tore loose with the clang of the round, and going to close quarters banged away with left and right to the body and head as fast as he could make his fists fly. For half of that round Ad kept up this furious attack, and in his condition it was some effort. Almost every time he let go with a punch he emitted a grunt which could be heard by the fans several rows back of the ring. But half a round at such terrific pace took all the steam out of the Cadillac bearcat and Hammer, who had met every attack by Wolgast with a like fusillade of punches, then started to come strong, taking advantage of his opponent's waning strength.

Hammer Piles Up Points.

From that time on to the tenth round Wolgast fought nearly every round in the same way. For the first half of each session he put all the strength he had into a furious attack, then stopped to a standstill, and simply had to allow Hammer to go ahead and punish him and score the points which, in the end won the victory. In the third round, during one of Wolgast's terrific attacks, his left fist caught Ever below the belt. It was an unintentional foul, for no one with the gameness of the former champion could be charged with deliberately pulling the trick.

At various periods during the scrap Wolgast's trainers had been handing him stimulants to strengthen him, and when the final round opened they handed him another "shot." Quickly as the bell rang Wolgast was out of his corner and after his opponent. Never in any ring was there such a final round. Ad took the aggressive, and knowing that he had only three minutes to go he slugged with all the strength he had left. Part of that session he fought simply on nerve, for his arms weighed a ton, but he won the round and then wearily turned to his corner—a game fighter but a loser.

Passing of Great Fighter.

That's the way the Wolgast of today fights. He battles not at all like the Wolgast who was a champion. The Michigan bearcat who could stand up for forty-two rounds and exchange punch for punch with that once durable Dane has passed, just the same as has Jim Flynn, the Pueblo fireman, discussed recently. Wolgast and Flynn are still fighting, but they both are fighting losing battles.

This story was meant to convey to the boxing fans the information that Wolgast is nearly through, but it gives an opportunity also to tell something about the boy who defeated the former champion at Racine. The fact that Ever Hammer won from Wolgast does not place him in the class of champions, but this performance and previous contests certainly show that he is moving ahead and is a real comer.

Victor in Last Three Bouts.

Hammer has scored victories in each of his last three bouts, against Joe Sherman, Joe Welling, and Wolgast. His victories over the two Joes were most impressive, more so than against Wolgast, but this is explained by the fact that in Wolgast he ran into a scrapper who fights the same way he does. Hammer is an infighter and so is Wolgast. When a pair of this type get together science is cast aside and it is a slugging match pure and simple.

WELSH SIGNS TO BOX HAMMER ON APRIL 17 IN ARENA AT RACINE

BY KNOCKOUT.

Manager Harry Pollok, acting for Champion Freddie Welsh, made good his promise yesterday to give Ever Hammer, Kid Howard's "Bristling Blond Tiger," the next chance at the title held by the elusive Briton. Articles were signed for a ten round quarrel on April 17 at Racine's Lakeside auditorium, after a conference between Promoter Richert of Racine and the rival managers. The affair will be at catchweights.

For stepping ten rounds against Hammer, Welsh will receive a guarantee of $2,000, with a privilege of 45 per cent of the gross receipts. Manager Pollok expects to exercise the option privilege in view of the Chicago following which Hammer has developed by his rapid rise in pugilism.

Percentage for Hammer.

To secure the chance against Welsh Manager Howard accepted for Hammer a graduated percentage of the receipts if the house draws well. Hammer will be handsomely repaid, and his manager was willing to take that chance in lieu of the $750 guarantee offered. If for any reason the attendance is disappointing, Ever will receive practically nothing for his efforts to lift the lightweight crown.

Welsh is scheduled to appear at Winnipeg in a war fund benefit early this week, and then will return here to do light training for the Racine bout.

Charley White has returned from Kansas City, where he won the referee's decision over Matt Wells in a fifteen round encounter Thursday night. Charley is carrying a shiner around his left eye as a souvenir of his engagement with the Englishman.

Fred Fulton in City.

Fred Fulton and Manager Mike Collins were in town for a short time yesterday, stopping off en route to New York. On April 28 the Minnesota giant is slated to battle Al Reich in the first of a series of three ten round bouts, for which Fulton is to collect $50,000. Jim Coffey and Frank Moran will be Fred's other opponents, but defeat for Fulton in either of the first two battles will cost him a chance at Moran. After a workout in the Arcade gym during the afternoon the Gopher and his manager left for Gotham last night.

Frankie Lynn and Willie Giblin have been matched to fight ten rounds at Grand Rapids on April 20. They will make 138 pounds at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

JOHNSON-WILLARD FILMS PUZZLE U. S. OFFICIALS.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—Customs officials face defeat after trying for months to keep the Johnson-Willard fight films out of the United States. A law having been passed forbidding the entrance of the films, movie men solved the problem a few days ago when they put a movie machine containing the films on the Canadian border and photographed the negatives from this side of the international line. The problem was turned over to the customs men today for solution. As yet they have been able to do nothing but try to find out what actually came over the border into this country.

"TRIBUNE" DECISIONS

At Philadelphia—Johnny Tillman and Eddie McAndrews fought a draw (6); Billy De Foe and Frankie McManus fought a draw (6); Frankie Wagner beat Henry Hauber (6); Willie Hinkle and Mike Coster fought a draw (6); Irish Patsy Cline beat Stanley Hinkle (6).

At Memphis—Jack Russo beat Bobby Hays (8); Willie Mangrum knocked out Benny Hers (2).

OLD MAT RIVALS DRAW IN FEATURE AT C. A. A.

BY HAMMERLOCK.

The old grudge between Leo Pardello and Paul Martinson still stands. The Italian and the Swede got together in the feature event of last night's wrestling show at the Chicago Athletic association, and after nearly an hour and a half of rough work, during which about everything but murder was committed, the old enemies quit on even terms.

Martenson took the opening fall in one of the hardest battles seen on the C. A. A. mat this season. After thirty-seven minutes of bitter grappling Pardello succumbed to a combination body hold and wrist lock. When the pair came back for the second fall Pardello used his old time skill to advantage and by a clever trick pinned Paul in two minutes and ten seconds with a body scissors and wrist lock.

With the score even, the pair came on for the final fall with blood in their eyes. They mixed up all kinds of fair and dirty wrestling for another forty minutes, then the referee decided to save the participants and spectators from further punishment and called the affair a draw.

Hjalmer Olson substituted for John Freiberg, who was unable to appear, and won two falls from Buck Weaver—not the White Sox athlete, but a wrestler hailing from Cleveland. Weaver won the first fall in 1:30 with a scissors on the head. Olson took the second in 18:25 with a head scissors and wrist lock and the third in 8:20 with a scissors on the body. Joe Hancock forfeited to Steve Lechki and Alex Kazan won from Andy Burns in straight falls.

BIG FIELD IN TURF EVENTS.

New York, April 8—Nominations for the stake events in the two spring race meetings here total 542, according to announcement by Walter C. Edwards, secretary of the Metropolitan Jockey club. This is nearly 100 more than last year. The meets will be held at Jamaica May 18 to 24 and June 13 to 23.

Reno Outfights Hays.

Memphis, Tenn., April 8.—[Special.]—Jack Reno, New Orleans featherweight, gained an easy decision over Bobby Hays, local boy, in eight rounds tonight. Willie Mangrum, local lightweight, knocked out Bernie Hers of Milwaukee in the second round.

Cubs, 10; Harmony A. C., 14.

The Cubs of the Chicago Hebrew institute defeated the Harmony A. C. quintet, 32 to 24, in the former's gymnasium. At half time the Cubs led, 9 to 8.

Sterling Pin Team Wins.

Sterling, Ill., April 8.—[Special.]—The Sterling bowling team won from the Rochelle team, 2,610 to 2,466.

100 YARD TITLE TANK RACE WON BY M'GILLIVRAY

Spurt Beats Kahanamoku in Hot Finish at Pittsburgh; Raithel, I. A. C., Third.

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 8.—[Special.]—Perry McGillivray of the Illinois Athletic club of Chicago won the National A. A. U. 100 yard championship swim today at the Pittsburgh natatorium staged under the direction of the Pittsburgh Athletic club. The local pool is only thirty yards long, therefore the swimmers had to make three lengths and ten yards besides, necessitating three turns. This explains the slowness of the time, 59 1-5, more than two seconds behind the record.

Four men were in the race—Duke Kahanamoku of Honolulu, Perry McGillivray and Arthur Raithel of the I. A. C., and Ted Cann of the New York A. C.

McGillivray led at the first turn, with Raithel second, the Hawaiian third, and Cann last. The Honolulu man led at the second turn with Cann second. Both still led at the third turn, but McGillivray forged ahead and won by a foot, with the brown athlete second, Raithel third, and Cann fourth.

It was a close race all the way and at the finish only five feet separated the first and fourth man.

The Chicago delegation of swimmers left Pittsburgh immediately after the meet for New York, where the national 220 yard event is to be held Monday night at the New York A. C. pool. Coach Bachrach of the I. A. C. and his star team members, Perry McGillivray, A. C. Raithel, and Harry Hebner, with Duke Kahanamoku, composed the party. The Hawaiian swimmer and his manager, L. L. Rawlins, have been traveling with the I. A. C. party since leaving Chicago.

Caroline of Brunswick

Reproduced from a Painting by Sir Thomas Lawrence

Every week The Sunday Tribune will reproduce in four colors on this page one of the world's most famously beautiful paintings. There will be a brief biography of the painter and a story of the painting. Herewith is reproduced another in the series.

By LOUISE JAMES BARGELT.

Amelia Elizabeth Caroline of Brunswick, wife of George IV. of England—1768-1821.

ON the eve of her ill fated marriage to George IV. of England, Amelia Elizabeth Caroline of Brunswick wrote to her dearest friend: "There is no sorrow so hopeless as mine. I have abandoned the man of my desire. My heart is dead. I am resigned."

Then she put behind her the days of her lively, irresponsible youth. She bid farewell to her parents, the Duke and Duchess of Brunswick, and to the adoring Brunswickian court, and went to meet the man who was to make her queen. It was the 26th of April in the year 1795. Caroline was 27 years old. The man was in a lamentable condition for a marriage ceremony. He stammered his vows of fidelity, vows that were scarce made before they were broken. He gave her a kiss that exceeded in Iscariotry the falsest bridal kisses of history, and they started on a honeymoon that lasted only till it was begun.

The curtain had rung up on the story of her life, a sordid, tragic story that ended in disaster. The best in her fled on that wedding day and the misery that filled her crushed the finer qualities that circumstances might have developed. A week after her marriage she discovered that her royal spouse had abandoned even the merest pretenses of faithfulness and that back of his feigned indifference lurked a real hate.

A year later the Princess Charlotte was born and ten months later Caroline and her little daughter retired to Blackheath, summarily dismissed by George.

But separation from her lord and master did not mean that she was out of range of his control. She was virtually a prisoner of state, helpless before George's grim determination to reduce her to impotence. In vain the actress in her emerged out of the woman. She pretended mockery, defiance, illness, storms, and tears. George remained obdurate. He spent his idle hours choosing women of beauty to keep about him, lavishing on them royal favors and indulgencies.

He misjudged, however, the real caliber of the woman who was his wife. The appalling disillusionments of her first postnuptial days had been followed by a period of strange unnatural submissiveness. Whether despair had dulled the spirit or fear had made it less daring, her character had undergone a temporary metamorphosis which deceived George completely. Reacting to normal after about three years, Caroline yielded to a burst of her old independence and took flight to the continent. There she gave herself up to the task of forgetting, seeking to substitute amusement for the happiness she knew she could never regain, and passion for the love that had passed out of her life forever.

Then George struck her and struck hard, a blow she never recovered from. He insisted that she was no fit guardian for their child, Charlotte, and had the child taken from her. He sought also to obtain a separation from her, accusing her of as great unfaithfulness to him as he had shown to her. This was eight years after their marriage.

It was at this point that the reigning king, George III., who had always been a stanch supporter of Caroline's, came to the rescue. He succeeded in vindicating her completely, establishing her in a suite of handsome apartments at the Kensington palace.

The concluding days of Caroline's checkered existence might have been a shade less grief submerged if she had been content to stay in England, where the people were sincerely friendly. But the continent held out a strong appeal and the desire for travel and excitement which she had substituted for the things that had been denied her had become imperious, insistent. She returned to France, plunging again into her old, reckless inprudences and managing to swamp herself in almost ruinous disaster.

After George III. died and the time of the coronation of George IV. drew near, counselors of the king endeavored in every way to bribe Caroline to stay on the continent. But she refused, arrogantly insisting that she would return to London and rule as queen consort with her husband. George retaliated promptly. He ordered her name stricken from the liturgy and introduced a bill to deprive her of the rights of queen consort of England. He brought a number of specific charges against her, any one of which, proved, would have resulted in her complete downfall and ostracism.

But Caroline of Brunswick had not lost her spirit. She secured Henry Brougham, one of the most brilliant young lawyers of England, to defend her. He imported numberless witnesses from the continent, all of them faultlessly primed in the recitals of glowing panegyrics on the virtue and goodness of Caroline. A sensational divorce case it was, modern in its details. George IV. lost his case. The divorce was not granted him.

Unfortunately Caroline was not willing to let well enough alone. She made a threat that she was going to be present at the coronation if she had to turn London inside out to do it. This madness was her last folly. She was forbidden access to Westminster abbey and failed ignominiously in the violent attempt she made to gain admittance.

In less than a month's time from the day of George's coronation Caroline died. Her mind faltered at the end, she gave herself up to wild abandonment to grief, and in 1821 passed away alone, neglected. On her tomb in Brunswick, where she was buried, she had carved the words:

"Here lies Caroline of Brunswick, the injured queen."

This portrait of Caroline by Sir Thomas Lawrence is one of the finest extant. It hangs now in the Luxemborg museum and is one of Lawrence's most masterly paintings. There is the charm of simplicity and poetic sentiment about it which distinguishes it from the conventionality of many of his portraits. Sir Thomas Lawrence devoted his genius to painting the faces of Europe's fashionable and royal people for remunerative sums and as a natural result much of his work bears the mark of having been turned out under driving pressure. Queen Caroline, however, is one of the best pieces of portraiture.

Another famous painting will be reproduced next week

The Scarlet Flower by Cora Harris

"She Was in a Home for the Friendless. After That She Was Hungry and Cold Till a Man Adopted Her."

IF I were a woman I could tell this story—any story—better. For a woman can always speak the truth so no man would believe it, and that which is not the truth so veraciously that every man must believe it. They all have imaginations which foster fabrications, and emotions which create illusions from realities. I have never known but one absolutely truthful woman. She is what is commonly known as "bad," and she accomplished an innocency and sincerity that was virginal in its appeal. The most untruthful one I ever knew is what is known as a "good woman." She is neither innocent nor sincere. The only time I have ever seen her disconcerted to the point of personal humiliation was when she was brought face to face with the artless, elemental simplicity of the other woman.

I set this down as the appropriate preface of the tale I am about to relate, because the facts recorded will illustrate exactly these qualities in the two women who figure in the narrative.

I am well past 40 years of age, in a state of autumnal self-preservation. That is to say, I am a bachelor. If I should be called upon to describe my character, my more personal entity, not my profession, which is the legal profession, I should say that up to the present I have practiced with singular success the first law of nature, self-preservation. I have resisted, sometimes shrewdly, sometimes sternly, that instinct of amalgamation which leads most men to the marriage altar, and after that to the grave.

Amalgamation is the right term to use in this connection, for when a man unites with a woman in marriage he joins himself to an individual of a different species from himself who has desires, needs, and ends to meet that are entirely different from those of his own nature.

I will not go so far as to say that I have never been tempted to marry. On the contrary, these temptations have been the chief diversions enjoyed in the course of an otherwise arduous career.

My reputation as a fortified bachelor is so well established in this town that it has long since ceased to be necessary for me to exercise any scruples in pursuing a romance to the more or less bitter end. No woman in Kingsboro society, I believe, would seriously entertain the expectation of marrying me. There are at least half a dozen whom I should have married if they had. Fortune has always favored me in this matter. Whenever some fair and willing to be faithful lady showed those evidences of sweet dependence and subjugation to which love invariably brings a woman, whenever one of them ceased to "play the game" and began to receive me with downcast eyes and changing color, I have always been able to create a salutary diversion by committing some outrage, some atrocious sin of omission, which with women is always the sin of negligence, some action which was more in keeping with the brutality of my real nature, and which led her to cast me from her as a "monster" unworthy of the regard of a refined person.

During the last three years I have been less transitory than usual in my devotions. This is due in part probably to the growing inertia of my romantic faculties through maturity and too many repetitions of the same experience. But, more particularly, I believe, it has resulted from a relation which I established, not so much at the feet of Mrs. Lydia McCloud as within signal distance of her recreant fancy.

She is a widow of five years' beautiful standing in Kingsboro. It may be more accurate to say, she sits. The social life of the town revolves about her more than she revolves. Her orbit is contracted to the ellipsis of her own parlor. She is a handsome young Jupiteress, choosing her own moons and stars where she listeth.

She is not really tall, but she has a form so slender, a presence so much inclined to raising your imagination of her, that she produces the impression of unusual height. If one saw only her hair, one would say that she is 60 if she is a day. It is snow white, abundant; she wears it with dignity, piled high upon her graceful head. If one saw only her face without this halo, one could not believe she is yet 30. It is oval to the point of being narrow. Her features are almost too regular, suggesting that unnatural perfection sometimes seen in sculpture. Her skin is more than fair. It is transparent, smooth, without a suggestion of color, except in the lips, which are full, amiable, and pinkly purple rather than red.

There are two reasons why my attentions to Mrs. McCloud have lasted longer than usual. First, she "plays the game." Love with her is an art which she develops in others, not herself. I doubt if there is a single eligible man in Kingsboro who has not been infatuated with her, and I doubt if a single one of them has ever been permitted to go so far as to propose marriage to her.

This indicates the second reason for my own lengthened devotion. I have entertained doubts approaching the gravity of fear that she would not have me if I did ask her to marry me. She is outrageously sufficient unto herself. She has a large income. She owns "Morning Glory Hill," upon the outskirts of Kingsboro, one of the most beautiful country places in this section. She has a host of friends, and all men for lovers, even down to Father Mann, who is the rector of the one High Church Episcopal congregation in this place and the shepherd of her entirely worldly soul. The good father does not know he is in love with her, of course, but she knows it by the constant attention which he gives to her spiritual welfare.

I may as well tell the whole truth while I am about it and admit that it caused me no little annoyance to realize that Kingsboro has been laughing in its sleeve for some time over what it is pleased to call my "predicament." I am a marauding Launcelot, forced to my knees at last. I am an old offender, paying in unrequited love for my many transgressions at the expense of that tender passion.

I cannot be sure, but I believe in time this unjust and unwarranted suspicion might have led me to lay serious siege to the highly ornamental citadel of Mrs. McCloud's heart and to have married her. Always providing, of course, I could have had the patience to wait until she was no longer so universally desirable and so sure in her own mind that she was.

I have never known any woman who could endure to the end the beauty shattering test of the years. When her petals begin to fall, when the pretty witchery of her brows grows indistinct, she will fly from the prophecy of her mirror into the arms of an adjacent lover, even if he is only half-hearted in his devotion. For she must have some one then to keep up the illusion of her charm, which she cannot do herself. She has lost the witness of her own spirit to that and she requires a man to fabricate evidence for her—to save her from the wrinkling truth.

Late one afternoon in June I went out to call on Mrs. McCloud. The whole place was in a bloom. A sun dial standing in the middle of a formal garden in one side of the lawn barely showed its face above a star jasmine vine.

On the varanda I saw a girl wearing a white frock standing bareheaded with her back to me, at the end of what Mrs. McCloud was pleased to call the "Enoch Walk." It led through the rose garden to one of the entrances to the lawn. The girl stood evidently gazing down the long roadway which led from the town. She looked as if she might have grown there, so motionless she was, with a hand lifted and resting like a clasping tendril upon one of the stone pillars of the gateway.

I remember wondering, as I rang the bell, if Mrs. McCloud had added another to her famous collection of roses. I was a little curious. She was not in the habit of entertaining other members of her own sex over the hour of afternoon tea. With the exception of a negative and negligible old maiden aunt, she lived alone in her house.

The next moment, however, I forgot the garden, the girl, and most of the world in the presence of the lady herself. She was seated as usual upon a high backed white chair, behind her tea table in the farthest corner of the room, with its colonial yellow walls making a kind of gold setting for her own vivid, gemlike personality.

"You are late!" she hailed me from the door in her softly charming voice. "All the others have come and gone."

"I hoped they would be," I answered, choosing one of the scattered chairs and seating myself on the opposite side of the table.

"You are not sociable," she accused.

"Not gregarious, you mean. No," I answered; "when I tipple tea I prefer it with one lump of sugar and you; not with Mrs. Weakley, the Blake girls, and all the men who swarm about you. I'm a close communionist socially."

"But you have missed the truffles," she grieved, looking at the crumbs in the plate.

"You must have had a jolly party," I said. "You appear to be secretly excited, as a woman does when she has a love letter concealed in her bosom or when she has enjoyed a dear transgression without being detected."

"You've missed it ever so far!" she laughed.

"Still, something has happened. I know it by the barometer of your spirit, which registers an unsettled condition of your inward weather. Has old Kewpie Underwood proposed at last?"

"You should be ashamed to speak so irreverently of Judge Underwood," she chided. "Certainly not; why should he?"

"Echo answers 'why?'" wagging my head at her. "Well, then, what is it?"

"I have committed a charity!" she said, crossing her hands upon the table and looking at me dubiously, with that half smile which often illuminates one side of her face. "I—I have adopted Eve Mary."

She began to laugh, high, keen, almost hysterical, her head thrown back, her pretty hands clasped to her breast.

"Stop! Wait! This is not the proper manner for a voluntary parent. Who is Eve Mary?"

"Ask the serpent who Eve was!" she cried, looking at me, as it seemed, over the top of her laughter.

"Can't! Serpent present, but not recognized by the court. I must repeat my question. Who is this Eve Mary?"

"I assure you that I do not know, although I have spent hours in her delightful society trying to find out," she replied.

"Ahem! Suspicious circumstance. What has she to say for herself?"

"Nothing. She is the most sublimely defenseless human being I ever saw, and I never met one who should be so tempted to defend——"

"Witness must confine her evidence strictly to answering questions," I interrupted. "What is her other name?"

"She has none!"

"Where does she hail from?"

"From everywhere and nowhere. She does not know herself where she was born, nor who her parents are, nor a single thing that she should know about herself."

"How old is she?"

"About 18, I think, but she does not know that either. She was in a home for the friendless. From this she graduated, still friendless, a few months ago, into domestic service as a scullery maid in New York. The cook did not like her and she was dismissed. If you could see her you would understand why a cook would not like her! After that she was hungry and cold until a man adopted her—she appears always to have been adopted! He brought her here. I do not know what happened—the usual thing, I suppose. As near as I can make out, she is simply glad to have more congenial employment."

"And what is that?" I asked.

"Being my adopted daughter, she is not fit for a maid, nor for a secretary, nor any useful thing!"

"Sounds plausible, too plausible. All the evidence being interpreted points to your daughter as a criminal, madam. Where is she now?"

"In the rose garden, I think."

Mrs. McCloud bent forward above her folded arms upon the table. Her eyes met mine with a gaze so droll, which at the same time conveyed a sharp alarm.

"Col. Faulkner, did you ever hear of an after dinner favor?" she began.

"No," I replied. "I've served my time with after dinner speeches, and I am acquainted with the solace of postprandial cigars, but I've never heard of an after dinner favor. What is it?"

"In my case it was Eve Mary, this little scarlet flower of the slums. She was presented to me by Father Mann after we had dined with him and his mother day before yesterday evening."

"It happened this way," she began again. "As I told you, we dined at the rectory that evening. After dinner we went into the garden to have coffee. Father smoked on in silence, his large, calm face turned up to the moon. He finished the cigar, then he turned to me and took my hand—you know that dear way he has——"

"'Lydia,' he said gently, 'do you know you have missed your vocation in life?

"'You have a gracious, tender soul, and you are neglecting to exercise all that is highest and best in your nature. You are only a butterfly, my dear.'

"'A sort of dollar butterfly, father, when you need anything for your charities,' I said, defending my worldliness. 'How much do you need now? You shall have it!'

"'Giving is not always charity, my child, but loving is. It's the greatest of these,' he mused, as if he were addressing some saint in his own bosom. Then, patting my hand coaxingly, as you might wheedle a child, he went on: 'I have been thinking of you much of late, Lydia, wishing to help you, and Providence has granted me the means in the most singular and direct way!

"'Yes, Lydia, I have a gift for you—a sort of after dinner favor. That is why I asked you over here this evening. And I am sure you will accept it. I am so sure that I have asked her to meet us here.'

"'Her!' I cried. 'Did you say her?'

"'Yes, it is a girl.'

"Then he went on to tell me about this Eve Mary; how she had been deceived and brought here by her benefactor, to whom she thought she was married. He had found her in—in one of those places, you know. He said she was a good child, a perfect child, singularly innocent, and so forth and so on.

"I listened with a stupefaction that you can better imagine than I can describe. I felt like a rebellious sinner suddenly caught in the trap of a saint. From being indignant I became strangely moved, not at the eloquent story he told me about the girl, though that was enough, but at myself, so dutiless, so far removed from—well, you know—from real love or kindness or service. Presently I began to weep. Can you imagine such a thing? I was terrified by his earnestness, by the sense of my own inability to meet it becomingly. Nothing was further from my mind than to accept this commission of motherhood to the Scarlet Flower, as he called her.

"Suddenly, while he was still in the midst of his story, I heard the gate of the garden close softly, and we both saw a girl approaching. She moved with a kind of gentle swiftness toward us, carrying something in her hand, pressed to the bosom of her dress.

"'Ah, here she comes now,' said Father Mann, moving aside upon the bench to make room for her.'"

Mrs. McCloud paused as if she searched inwardly for some definition which eluded her. Then, looking away from me through the window again, she went on:

"I cannot describe her; no one could. She came on like a little white ghost of—of sweetness, her eyes fixed calmly upon my face, not his.

"'So you came, Eve Mary?' he said.

"'Yes,' she answered, simply, standing before us, not timidly, but as a child waiting to be put to bed, just that.

"'This is Mrs. McCloud, the lady I told you of, who is going to take care of you—and love you, Eve Mary, as you deserve to be loved,' said father.

"'I know,' she answered. 'I have brought her these,' she said.

"Then I saw what she carried in her hand was a bunch of those flowers that bloom only in the shade; little white novitiate blossoms.

"'I have been out there in the forest beyond the town this afternoon. I gathered them for you,' she told me.

"'You must not go so far alone, Eve Mary!' father cautioned her.

"'No?' She glanced at him, then back to me. 'But I shall not need to, after this. You have many flowers, father says,' she addressed me.

"'They are yours now.'

"I cannot tell how I came to say that. It came out of some voice of my heart which had never spoken before.

"'Mine? All mine?' she cried, and then she clasped me in her arms. She clung to me in a kind of rapture. I could no more have escaped from her than a mother could have escaped the child she had borne. I do not love her, but—but I must keep her!" she ended with a sob, laying her head upon her arms.

"But you do not want her!" I exclaimed.

"No, no!" she cried, lifting her face and looking at me wildly. "I do not want her. She terrifies me. I feel as if she had changed the horoscope of my stars, as if she were fate staring at me with the eyes of a child—and she is good. I do not know how she managed that, but she is good. She says father told her to forget the past, everything, and she has done it literally. She never speaks of that; never betrays that in word or deed."

"What are you going to do with her?" I asked gravely.

"You had better ask what she is going to do with me! She has taken possession of me, of this house that was mine, of the garden, even of Aunt Penelope. This morning she came in and took my hair down, arranged it to please herself. This afternoon she chose this gown for me to wear. She—she loves me! It is awful."

"Will you introduce her to your friends?" I ventured.

"Sufficient unto the day is the Eve Mary thereof," she answered with a return of her usual wit. "Don't ask me what I shall do. If she chooses she will introduce herself to all of you—and when she does, all of you will receive her as I have done."

I was curious to see Eve Mary after this description of her, but some masculine instinct warned me that I had better not confess my desire. Mrs. McCloud is far from suspecting the fact, but she is deeply, consistently, femininely jealous of every other woman, from the highest to the lowest, who might even for a moment attract a man's attention from herself. I left her guiltless of the offense.

I did not see Mrs. McCloud again for several months. The following day, after my visit to her, I was called away from Kingsboro on business. When I returned she had gone to some little village in Maine where she spends her summers, taking Eve Mary with her.

One morning early in October I met Father Mann on the street.

"Ah, the very man I want to see!" he said so cordially that I noticed it. "I saw Mrs. McCloud yesterday," he went on, tapping his stick upon the pavement. "She was asking about you, wondering why you had not been out to see her."

"I did not know she was back. I'll go out to tea this afternoon," I replied.

"Ah, I don't believe she has resumed that very delightful function. The fact is, I doubt if she will. She has become, well, quite domestic. Not so much interested in society, you know, since—since," he hesitated—"she has assumed the cares of a mother. You knew she has adopted a young girl, I suppose?"

"I have heard something to that effect," I answered guardedly, seeing more questions in his eyes than he put into words.

"Eve Mary! Charming child, you must go out and make her acquaintance," he said, nodding to me as he passed on down the street.

I went out to Morning Glory late that afternoon. The old place had that languid, disheveled appearance due to the autumn season and to the fact that it had been neglected for several months. Wild asters and golden rod shook their purple and yellow plumes upon the edges of the lawn.

I found Mrs. McCloud seated upon the veranda behind the vines. She belonged to the autumn scene. She was beautiful in the same pathetic fashion. She wore a pale lavender gown, the color of her dying cosmos blooms, with a bow of vivid coral velvet in the lace of her bodice, which was not so low upon her shoulders as usual, with some filmy white stuff drawn up close around the throat.

All very simple, yet for the first time since I had known her I was conscious of the fact that she had given a kind of anxious consideration to her appearance. She had made the importunate best of every charm she possessed. When a woman gives this kind of thought to herself, when she deliberately makes the most of her beauty, she is no longer quite beautiful. She is only making an art of it. I perceived this as I regarded my companion. She had gone so far as to put a little rouge upon her cheeks, heightening her effect, as the red leaves upon the vine before us foretold the death of the leaves. Even the smile was not quite sure of itself—merely the beautiful past participle of a merry soul.

"How have you been? How many killings did you make among your Yankee lovers this summer?" I asked, accomplishing the effort she refused to make to be gay.

"I have spent a very quiet summer. 'Killings' are not in my line now. Eve Mary attends to that," she answered coolly.

"Eve Mary! I had forgotten her," I exclaimed. "And how is she? Has she stolen your heart or your jewels?"

"Neither. But she has got every one else's heart. I am quite eclipsed by her. My friends here worship now at her shrine."

"Then there are two shrines in the Morning Glory temple!" I laughed.

"No, only one. She is the tea table vestal now. Would you believe it? Old Kewpie Underwood is crazy about her!"

"Good! Never liked him. Too much inclined to presume upon the fair sex, with his foppish November youth. Do you think she will marry him?" I asked gayly.

"Marry! Do the stars marry? Eve Mary is a star. When Father Mann instructed her to forget the past she did it. I believe she is unconscious even of her gender, which makes her the most dangerous flirt I ever saw in my life!" Her tone, her expression, far too serious, conveyed a mysterious dislike; not jealousy, but fear.

"Eve Mary a flirt!" I mused, still smiling. "Well, the criminal nature must assert itself, one way or another."

"Did you see her as you came up?" she questioned.

"No," I answered.

"She is out there somewhere. She served tea in the rose arbor this afternoon. I didn't go out. I have not been well since we came home. The weather here, it is still very warm after Maine, you know."

This was news! Mrs. McCloud yielding her tea table to a girl, and such a girl.

For the next hour I made one effort after another to engage her in conversation which would exclude Eve Mary. It could not be done. She was like a moth, ever returning to that little candle, and always apparently to singe her wings.

"Tell me," she said at last, suddenly turning to me a countenance unveiled of its beauty, anguished, drawn down to a strange defeat. "What do you think of me; I mean—O, it is difficult to say it, but how do I impress people—as a soulless, wicked, selfish person?"

"Certainly not, my dear lady," I exclaimed, astonished and embarrassed at the way she was letting herself go. "You have always seemed to me the most beautiful, fascinating woman I know!"

"Fascinating!" she echoed bitterly; "that is what any woman can be if she knows how. And beauty—it fades like the flowers there in the garden. Then, then—" she whispered—"the person you really are, have been all your life, comes out and weaves the truth upon your face. Tell me that, the truth you see."

"But the rose is still the rose. That is the only truth you reveal, madam!" I protested.

"Ah, you will not tell me," she breathed, her eyes misty with tears, her lips tremulous with emotion.

"Do you know how Eve Mary will look when she is my age?" she went on.

"Always Eve Mary," I objected. "She will be fat and frowsy," I answered, prophesying the most hopeful fate I could think of to console this fading beauty.

"No, she will not. Her spirit is a holy mace. She will always be as slender as that. And her face, it will be like one of those dim Madonnas painted in a monastery by a monk, a faded sweetness."

"It is growing chilly out here, let us go in," she said, rising suddenly.

"No, I have an engagement; barely time to meet it now," I answered, holding the door open for her.

"Good-by; come again," she said, smiling wistfully to me out of the darkened hall.

I took the Enoch walk through the rose garden to the lower gate of the park.

I made a turn in the walk, stopped and removed my hat. It was impossible to go on. A girl stood directly in front of me beside a little white toyhouse raised upon a pole in the hedge, so high that she was tiptoeing to peep in. Soft moaning, cooing sounds came from within. She let herself gently down upon her heels and looked at me, much as you have seen Marys look at the world from old pictures—with the same mild sweetness.

"Did I startle you?" she whispered confidentially.

"You certainly did!" I exclaimed. "Are you the spirit of this place?"

"No, only Eve Mary. I have been putting the birds to sleep."

"Only Eve Mary," I repeated.

"Hist!" she warned, putting a finger to her lips. "Don't speak so loud. You might awaken them. They've just put their heads under their wings. Look!" She beckoned me.

I crept forward, bent my head, and saw two pigeons sitting side by side upon the one rafter in the toyhouse, very much puffed out; mere balls of whiteness.

"Isn't it cunning the way they make nightcaps of their wings for their precious heads. I always stay with them till they've done that," she whispered, looking at me with that grave Mary smile.

Her hair was no color at all in the moonlight, merely brighter than that, softly clinging to head and brow as if it loved her.

Her eyes were gray, the color of winter twilight, and much too large for her little round face. When she ceased to smile I perceived that her mouth was sad—upper lip deeply bowed, the lower one straight, the corners drooping. Suddenly she turned her head and looked again at the pigeons.

"Luini's Madonna!" I thought, recalling Mrs. McCloud's prophecy, and not knowing that I had spoken aloud.

"Did you say something to me?" she asked.

"No, something about you."

"Good night!" she murmured, and was gone. A mere woman would have asked me what I had said about her!

I was destined to learn that she was not afflicted with the teasing curiosity of her sex. She lived literally by faith in all things. She either could not or would not reason. She merely believed.

This was the beginning of my love for Eve Mary. A love which for months I denied even to myself as preposterous, which I struggled in vain to overcome. She was certainly not the woman a man in my position should choose for a wife. I lifted her "past" for a wall between us, only to have her walk through it as if there was no such thing. I made a defense of my age, which was double hers. I called her the "chosen child," only to have her appear the next time I saw her the very spirit of those elder Marys; sweet, majestic, ageless, but not young.

If it had been merely a passion I could have mastered it as one quenches fire—with the cold water of facts and reason. Passion appeals to the senses, but love appeals to the imagination. It is the one perfectly satisfactory illusion in this unsatisfactory world. I could not explain it. She did nothing consciously to attract me. She is the only woman I have ever known who is absolutely just herself.

During that winter I went almost daily to Morning Glory. I devoted myself to Mrs. McCloud, chiefly for the purpose of encountering Eve Mary as I came or went. We took long walks in the brown fields, or we devoted ourselves to the domestic life of the two pampered pigeons.

But I always found Mrs. McCloud waiting for me by the library fire, a determined woman who had cut herself off from social engagements and pleasures that she might be there alone to receive me. Occasionally Father Mann came in, which annoyed her. But I was glad of the excuse to take my leave and go to Eve Mary, who would be in the parolr, or out upon the wind blown lawn. Sometimes for days I did not see her at all. And then I did not dare to ask for her.

That which added to my torment and confusion was the peculiar position I found myself in toward Mrs. McCloud. From the time of my call upon her after her return to Morning Glory she had never mentioned the name of Eve Mary. This girl, who bid fair at first to become the everlasting themes between us, was now forbidden to enter by tacit consent. Yet I am sure neither of us thought of anything else.

In time I became aware of the fact that Mrs. McCloud was deliberately torturing me. She read my heart and smiled. I began to hate her. Our conversation consisted in wounding each other as often as we could with veiled significance. We crept upon each other in the dark with drawn swords.

"Men do not often love women, they only desire them," she told me one day.

"It is true," I answered, thrusting back, "they desire many and live to love one. After which they no longer desire any other."

The glance she returned was so grave, so fiercely lifted with the courage of a woman's defeat, that I pitied her. My hate was changed to anguish for her.

"Forgive me!" I stammered, ashamed.

"What is there to forgive?" she replied. Then, after a pause, "Have you heard the news?"

"No, what news?" I asked, not suspecting that she had flanked me and approached from another quarter for a definite purpose.

"Old Kewpie has left town, gone to Florida—in March!" she laughed.

"You will miss him," was all I could think of to say.

"No, he has not been here of late—and young John Weakley, who was with us as much as the cat, has gone off somewhere, too. I do not know where. Mrs. Weakley doesn't come any more either, nor the Winstons, nor the Shirleys, nor even the Blake girls, whose age should be some defense," she laughed. "In fact, you are the only one of the old circle who dares to break the quarantine—why?"

It is impossible to convey an idea of the coolness, the significance, with which she imparted this information; the satirical softness with which she stung me at the end, with the little interrogative, "Why?"

"What do you mean?" I demanded.

"You are the last one to ask that, you who knew from the beginning what must happen," she answered calmly.

"Are you referring to—to Eve Mary?" I asked, feeling as if I dashed with all my strength against a wall of ice in calling that name.

"Of course; who else should I be thinking of in such a connection?" she answered.

"But who has betrayed her; how should any one know her story, and if they did, what difference should it make—here?" I protested.

"She told it herself to each man who proposed to her, I believe. As to the difference," I suppose it should not make any, but it does. One should merely entertain goodness, charity, as an ideal, Col. Faulkner; never really practice it. To take a 'scarlet flower' from the mire and plant it in one's garden sounds pretty, but it—spoils the garden!" she concluded.

"This is horrible," I exclaimed, springing to my feet. "The poor child!"

She held one hand to her bosom, looking at me and waving to and fro in her chair like a thin blue flame.

"It is horrible!" she cried. "And suppose you had to live with it—as I do?"

"You shall not, if I can win her," I answered from the door, and went.

It was the pigeons' bedtime. I found her there—Eve Mary—kneeling upon the ground, face bent as if she told her beads with the crocuses in the grass. The March wind lifting her hair like bright beams around her head, the red coat she wore fluttering like scarlet wings back from the white frock she wore. She was not thinking of the pigeons. They perched, softly moaning, in the roof of the little house, looking down at her sidewise, wondering why she neglected them, grieving for that.

"Eve Mary!" I called her gently.

"O, it is you!" she answered, rising and coming to me.

"You have been in to see mother? I am glad. She is unhappy. And I—I am wretched!" she whispered.

"Why, dear?"

"Because of myself. The people who used to come here to see mother, they stay away now on account of me!" She looked at me stricken, sorrowfully pale.

"I came," I answered, trying to take her little cold hands.

"But you do not know yet about me!" she objected, drawing back.

"I do know," I said. "I have known from the beginning."

"And yet you come?" she questioned.

"Because I love you!" I said, seizing the hand she withheld so firmly.

"Wait," she cried; "you do not know all I must tell you. O, I must tell some one now, or—I shall do it," her voice died away indrawn. Her eyes were fixed in terror upon my face. I led her to the bench in the rose arbor, drew her down beside me.

"Now try and tell me, Eve Mary, what is it that you have not yet told?"

"It is this: When Father Mann found me—in that place, you know, I was going mad, there alone. I was beginning to understand what had happened to me. There was no one to speak to that I could tell—I was ready to do it. If he had not come when he did—I should not have been there. You understand?"

I inclined my head and held her trembling hands closer.

"I did not tell him; I have never told any one, but he made haste to comfort me," she went on. "He told me that everything was all right—right! Can you understand what that meant to me? That I was not bad. It saved my soul, cleansed me—from all unrighteousness. He said I should be taken care of; he had a home for me, and a mother—for me, who had never had that! He said I must forget, not repent, but forget; that was the only duty, the only command, he laid upon me. I began to weep—O, have you ever wept like that?" she cried, searching me.

"I have never been good enough," I answered.

"He did not try to stop me. He told me to come to him at the rectory that evening, that he would have her there, the lady who was to love me."

She sighed, looked beyond me into the gathering gloom, as she began again.

"It was already afternoon. I went out as far as I could beyond the town into a pleasant wood. I gathered a little bunch of flowers for her who was to be my mother. Then I went to the rectory—very late—and gave them to her. I thought she loved me. I was sure that she loved me. I forgot everything but that—and this place. I have been so happy here. But now all at once everything is different. She is different, my mother. All things accuse me; even the little crocuses in the grass. I remember what I had forgotten. I can think of nothing else!" she cried. "It is coming again, that awful madness!" She shrank back, her face so wild, pinched, with a nameless horror.

"Listen! Eve Mary," I said, drawing her to me, "you must leave here."

"Yes, I know it. I—I am going tonight——"

"With me," I put in, "as my wife!"

"No, not that!" she moaned.

"I love you. I have loved you since the first moment I saw you."

"But will I love you?" she asked.

"Kiss me?" I pleaded.

"If I kiss you will I love you?" She held back.

"Try it," I insisted, beginning to smile.

"You are sure?" very seriously.

"Absolutely!"

The next moment, with her dear head upon my breast, she sighed:

"I do!"

By Mae Tinee

Their Martyred Darling.

HE was a martyr. He had always been a martyr. From the time he wore kilts the world had ill used him and he had borne with the world as a martyr should. When a mere baby and things had gone wrong he had not cried. Not for long, anyway. He had merely with quivering lip retired to a corner, where he had sat patiently until the entire household, disarmed by what they thought was his silent suffering, had prostrated themselves at his feet and showered him with kisses and offerings—which he did not in the least deserve, having been an extremely bad child, but which, time having erased the memory of wrong and only misery being apparent, his elders insisted he receive—"poor darling, did they abuse him!"

When a kid at school he was adored by the girls and despised by the boys. Why? Because he was a martyr. Though that wasn't the name by which the boys called him. Far from it. "Cow-wow-erd!" was what they yowled at him, in such cadences as only scornful boyhood can produce. "Cow-wow-erd!" You see, he wouldn't fight. No matter what the provocation, he could not be persuaded to use his fists. Once an eager pugilist had tried beating him into fury, but had soon desisted, for what was the use of beating a pulp who drew himself up and with head in the air marched sadly by the principal's window, thereby inspiring the following conversation and results:

"Jasper, what is the matter?"

"Nothing worth mentioning, sir."

"Did you fall and hurt yourself?"

"O, no, sir."

"Did something hurt you?"

"No—not something."

"Somebody?"

"I would rather not say, sir."

"Jasper, I command you to answer me. Did those rough boys beat you up?"

"Well—well, they—I cannot tell a lie, sir!"

Bang! It was the principal's swivel chair that banged—he had a way of tipping far back, consequently making an ungodly racket when he decided suddenly to arise. The principal reached for a stick known as hickory. He used the stick—and he was an expert in the use of hickory sticks. Then he delivered an eulogy. The tidrade was directed toward the rough creatures who had so far forgotten their manhood, etc. The eulogy was in favor of one Jasper Blackley—a young man of the highest principles, a young man who would be a good citizen, a young man who would probably end up as president like—he mentioned feelingly—President McKinley. And he spoke more truly than he wotted. If ever Jasper Blackley ended up by being president he would end up by being a martyred president or know the reason why.

Then came the girls with their tears and offerings. Fudge, pin cushions, doilies, and whisk broom holders. He was their hero. Their martyred darling. They formed a Jasper Blackley club and sketched his portrait in india ink on the backs of their hands. And so passed the school days of Jasper Blackley—or at least nearly so. The only changes lay in the deeper aversion of the boys and the more profound idolatry of the girls as he went through the grades to high school and from there—but no, he never went to college.

His health failed. At least he said it failed. He told his adoring mother that if she wished it he would try to go through college. Cuh hoo! Cuh hoo! (The sound being a hollow cough.) He would go for her dear sake, for it was the desire of his life to make her happy. But—cuh hoo! He felt—ah, but why worry her with his feelings. Cuh hoo! Cuh hoo! Always remember, mother dear, that I loved you more than—cuh hoo!

As we said, he never went to college.

Did he die?

He did not.

He did not entirely lose the hollow cough—the least little exertion, like beating a rug or winding a clock or running a lawn mower started the horrible thing right away, but he acquired a most deceiving appearance of well being. Waxed slick and fat. His cheeks acquired a rose tint under the olive that was most attractive. And his manners—dear, dear, what manners that boy did have! Could he use his eyes? Every minute! And at the command of those orbs of light fair one after fair one laid down her arms and surrendered—from thence on she manufactured fancy work for him and composed songs and ate pickles. And one of the fair ones was the daughter of a man who owned a motion picture company.

He heard his daughter rave first over the human wonder with amused tolerance. But as the raving continued from day to day, and not only his daughter but all his daughter's feminine friends seemed to be afflicted with the same sort of insanity, a new gleam came into his eye. He sat up and took notice. First, last, and in between he was a business man.

"He was a martyr."

"What does this young man do?" he was interested enough to inquire one day.

Said the adoring daughter: "Nothing right now. He's devoted to his mother—and he's not strong."

"Let's see his picture," said father.

The picture—gorgeously framed—was put devoutly into his hands and the business man devoted several moments to profound contemplation of the face revealed—with its tender lips, its womanish chin, its eyes with their long lashes suggesting softness—yes, quite softness—and passion. Then said father, who was first, last, and in between a business man: "Ask Mr. Blackley if he will call on me regarding a business proposition which I think would be to our mutual advantage."

Said daughter anxiously:

"You'll be nice to him, father!"

Father, grinning and handing back the picture in its gilded frame, responded: "O, yes. Quite, quite nice! He need have no fear!"

Since then Jasper Blackley has risen to fame. His name is practically hourly on the lips of every sentimentally inclined young woman who attends the motion picture theaters. His picture, autographed, is on her dresser.

Feeling a curiosity regarding him, I called not long ago and was shown to his dressing room. A valet met me at the door and took my name. I heard a languid voice respond:

"Ah—show her in!"

Mr. Jasper Blackley, bathrobed and with his makeup on, greeted me kindly. He asked how I had been. I told him. Then we talked about him. He spoke sadly if kindly of his profession. It was hard work—cuh hoo—but he was glad that he was able to do it—for his mother's sake—cuh hoo, cuh hoo! And then it brought such pleasure into the lives of, ah, cuh hoo, the dear people who went to see him on the screen. But—he pointed to a waste basket full of mail—that sort of thing was trying—he was afraid, a little afraid he might have a nervous breakdown.

However——?

I did not stay much longer. The sight of his patient suffering under hardship was too much, too much!

Henry King

HENRY KING of the Balboa company was born in Lafayette, Va., at a time he refuses to mention. Not, probably, from any desire to conceal his age, but because he thinks an inquisitor has a lot of nerve to ask him. When a boy he was an ardent bicyclist and was always entered in any race in which they would allow him to participate. While still young he started stage work with the Osmond company, his salary being $15. He worked his way to the leads in a year's time and from then on played in well known productions such as "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Devil," Graustark," etc. Then pictures claimed his attention and he went to work with Lubin, where he acted and directed for quite some time. About nine months ago he joined the Balboa Amusement Producing company at Long Beach, Cal., and has been there ever since. You will remember his work with this company, no doubt, in the "Who Pays" series, where he played opposite Ruth Roland. Mr. King is exceedingly good looking. He is six feet tall, has fair hair and blue eyes and weighs 182 pounds. His hobby is automobiling. To quote himself, "Get out and get under." He can also swim. He is married and admits it.

MAE TINEE'S MOVIE ANSWERS TO FANS

"ASK ME! ASK ME!"

MRS. V. H.: While I do admire your ambition and enthusiasm, I still think you are being foolish to let your writing come between your husband and yourself. No wonder he was angry when he found out that the reason the boiled dinner burned was that you were scenario writing in the front room and forgot all about it. Scorched cabbage is pretty fierce, you know!

JACK D.: I am glad to know you are not exactly ugly. Your sentence sounds somewhat like a puzzle. You say that you are not exactly ugly, for you are not handsome. Also you say you are tall and slim and have some sort of an imagination. That last sounds very promising. So few of us have any imagination at all. For information on how to become a motion picture actor I would advise you to send a stamped and self-addressed envelope to me. I have an article on the subject which I think will interest you. Wish you success.

MY LITTLE SUNSHINE: Must be lovely to have a chance to go to a picture show every Saturday night when one feels that while watching the pictures one is "far away from every care and in the land of love." Too bad you can't go oftener. However, it must be lots of fun to live on a farm. So far as I know Crane Wilbur is not married. He has brown hair. He took the part of Harry Marvin in "The Perils of Pauline." Mr. Bushman is with the Metro company, 1465 Broadway, New York. If you will write to Lottie Pickford in care of the American company, Santa Barbara, Cal., inclosing a quarter in stamps, her photograph will be sent to you. Mr. Wilbur is with the Mutual company, Los Angeles, Cal.

ALICE: No, my dear, I would not advise you to become a motion picture actress, but if you are interested in the subject, send a stamped, self addressed envelope and I will take great pleasure in mailing you an article I have on the subject. Also a list of the various studios. The American company, which you say is your favorite, has no studio in Chicago—only business offices. Edward Coxen is not married to Winifred Greenwood. She is the wife of George Field. You might write to him in care of the American company, Santa Barbara, Cal. Yes, I think he is an extremely good actor. I am sorry you are "unknown," but I suah am glad you is a "lovin' friend."

HOPE: I am so glad you wrote again. No, Anita Stewart and Anita King are not the same girl. Miss Stewart and Earl Williams have played opposite for quite a number of years. Earl Williams was on the "legitimate" stage before entering pictures. Miss Stewart, I am told, was not in "The Sins of the Mothers." Julia Swayne Gordon was the "mother." Lottie Pickford is married and not divorced. Mary Pickford is married to Owen Moore. Yes, I have met Edna Purviance. She is quite young and is, I think, one of the prettiest blondes I have ever seen. She has always lived in California. No trouble at all, Hope. Write again some time.

RODNEA: It doesn't take a particularly lovely disposition to conduct this department. Certainly not when correspondents are as pleasant as you have been. It doesn't require a bit of patience to answer your questions, Rodnea. Here's to 'em! Henry King is married to Gypsy Abbott and is with the Balboa company, Long Beach, Cal. I have some printed material on how to become a photo player which I will send you and which I think might be helpful to you. The field is overcrowded at present, but there is a chance that some company might give you a trial as an extra. For the information I have you will have to send me a self-addressed envelope. You did not even give me your address in your letter.

JUST JAKE: You had just what was coming to you. Why shouldn't the girl have treated you with a "cold and haughty stare" when you were annoying her? I'd have treated you to something infinitely worse.

The fact that she's in pictures is no sign that she wants to be followed by every Tom, Dick, and Jake. You make me tired, Jake! Y'wekkum!

A. T. K.: The Oliver Morosco company produced "The Yankee," in which Blanche Ring played the part of Jessie Gordon, Forrest Stanley was Jack Lawrence, Herbert Standing was President Ambroco Castrobs, Howard Davie took the part of James Seavey, Harry Fisher Jr. was Willie Fitzmaurice, Robert Dunbar, Phillip Gordon,; Joe Ray, Morales; Bonita Darling played the part of Winnie Gordon, and Syd de Grey was Wiggs. Your letter was not a bit of bother. I was glad to get it and hope you will write again if I can be of further service to you.

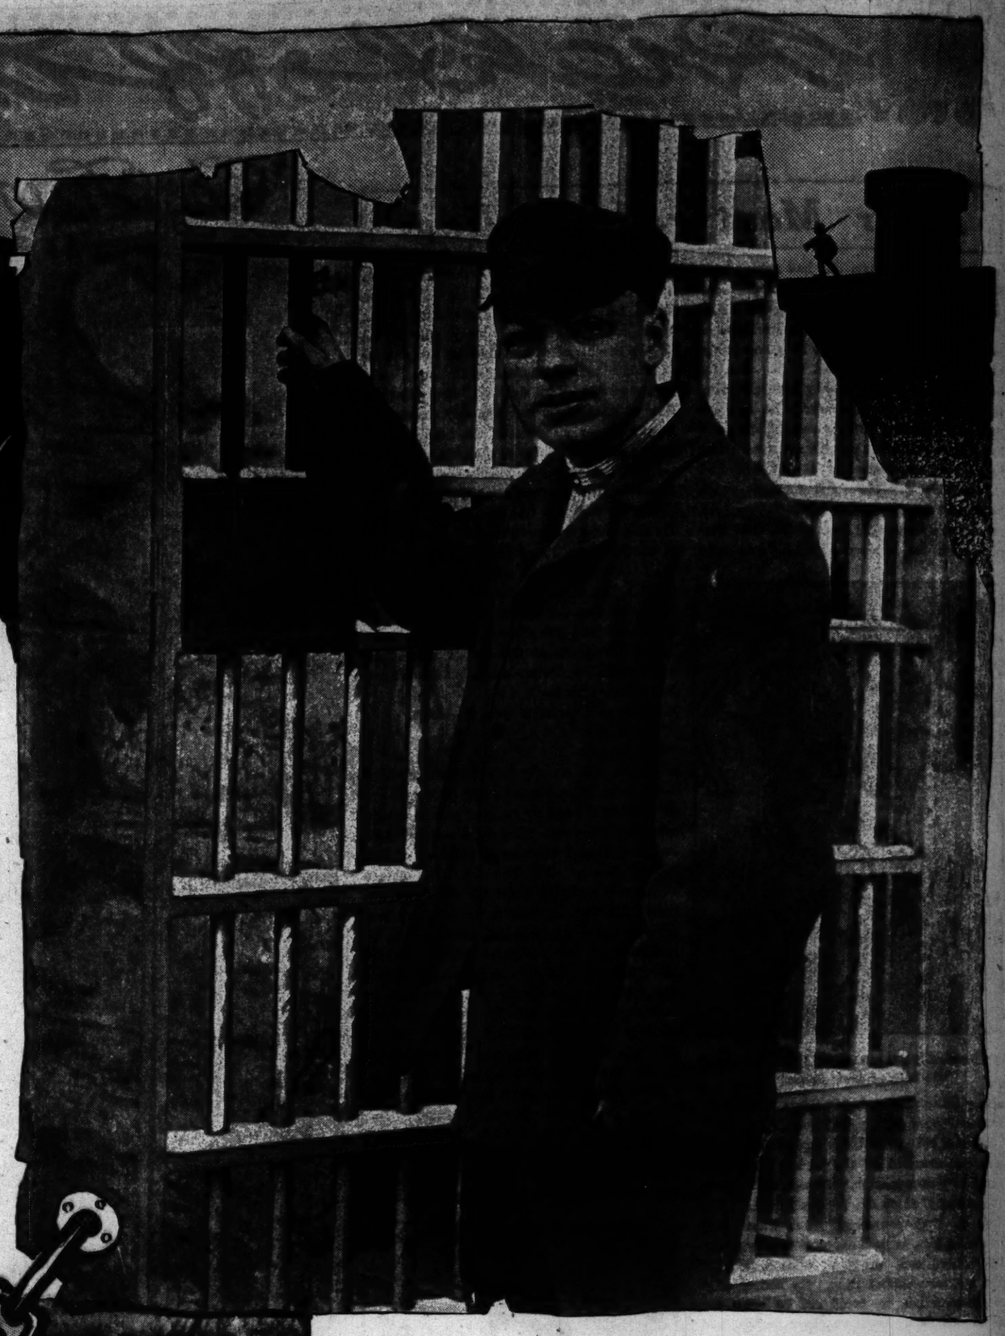
THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

INSIDE "THE BIG HOUSE"

By Oney Fred Sweet



"One Might Question On and On, but Here They Were, Just Men—Just Men with the False Glamour or the Grewsomeness of Their Crimes Showing Only on the Records—Just Men, Looking Like Other Men Who Eat and Sleep and Work and Plan."

MY cellmate at Joliet was an unmelodramatic sort. Somehow, being movie educated, I had expected that we would all wear stripes and spend most of our time clinging to the iron bars of our cells. Looking back now as an ex-convict, I realize that during my stay in the "big house" I not only utterly missed coming in contact with striped suits but ball and chain "jewelry" and the "lock step" as well. And my cellmate—again alas for those scenes that had been so thoroughly fixed in my mind by the screen drama—instead of laying before me some scheme for filing our way to liberty with a secreted saw, proceeded, the moment we had reached our quarters for the night, to get busy on his correspondence school course.

But I don't suppose you can blame the scenario plot writers. I have an idea it wouldn't cause much of a thrill to portray captured auto bandits and holdup men sitting about weaving chairs and making shoes, especially when these fellows—you would recall them in a minute should I mention their names—are all dressed in prosaic, bluish gray, ordinary cut coats and trousers, and walk to and from the shops as leisurely as any factory employé "on the outside."

Before settling down to his correspondence school course my cellmate had a few rather personal questions to ask me. Like all the rest, he had me "pegged" for a "fresh fish" (new arrival), and he wanted to know if I was a criminal or just a convict; whether I sought to be crooked just for the love of being crooked, with my defense all framed in advance of the "job," or whether, through stress of circumstance, I had made a bad slip and really wished to get back on "the straight and narrow." He wanted to know if I was just doing a "bit" (a term) or whether I was "doing all of it" (life).

My cellmate was exceedingly anxious about his correspondence school lessons. The professors who looked over his papers, he said, were strict. The three professors, be it said, happened to be college graduates who were themselves going about for the present in coats and trousers of prosaic, bluish gray.

Youth in Bluish Gray.

In fact, it had been a youth in bluish gray who had taken my pictures in the morning—front and side view—with a number stuck on an iron rod under my chin so that it would photograph along with me; another youth in bluish gray had registered my finger prints; still another in bluish gray had seen that I was properly decked out in a serviceable, if rather drab, spring suit exactly like his own. The three had seemed particularly interested in securing good photographs, getting perfect finger prints, and, as near as possible, giving me a fit in clothing.

I couldn't see how the finger prints counted for much, but the fellow told me that there were twenty-six thousand classifications of them and I let him go ahead with the process. I was beginning to do just what I was told to do anyhow. My talk with the finger print man was a little bit longer than it was with the other two, and in that extra conversation he dropped a hint of longing that brought me back to a swift realization that I was in a place surrounded by a high stone wall that included towers wherein men watched with rifles.

It was after I had become pretty well initiated that I met "Father Peter," conspicuous in his priest's robes. I had an impression that Father Peter was going to say something to me about my soul. I asked him a question first. I asked him why men came to the penitentiary.

Father Peter was thoughtful for just a moment.

"Prohibitionists tell us it is because of drink," he answered finally. "Sociologists tell us it is because of environment; eugenists blame heredity; school teachers will say it is because of ignorance. I could take the list further, but all these are but contributory causes and accompanying circumstances. There are plenty of gray hairs in prison, but it is mostly youth that comes here. The trouble is that the boy is neglected when he is at an impressionable age. He goes out into the world at that age and he hears of vice, not as vice really is, but of vice gilded. In his adolescent state his imagination is fired through the conversation of thoughtless elders. He doesn't get the right guidance at this period and at the age of 19 we have a young forger, a young bandit, or a young murderer whose acts appall society."

Sighs of Broken Lives.

I could see, when we sat down to the sustaining food that noon in the big dining hall, that Father Peter was right about the youth of convicts. It was at the noon meal that we had music. The cornetists and the trombone players and the drummers—all of them in bluish gray—gave us one classical air and one ragtime number. We listened—the twelve hundred and forty of us huddled together—without looking up from the rows upon rows of tables that reminded me of desks in school.

Somehow there was something the matter with that music. The players were not at fault; there was no discord so far as their notes were concerned; the rhythm was perfect. The complete echo of it there in the great hall contained the sighs of too many broken lives. That was it.

I don't mean to say that the atmosphere was one of despair. The atmosphere was not gay; neither was it gloomy. A Negro sitting in front of me kept time with his foot to the ragtime number. A sort of reminiscent expression came into the eyes of the middle aged fellow next to me who was "doing all of it." Yet it was not regular "outside" band music.

To the men at our table a young Chinese passed the bread basket. At a second glance I recognized him as the same who had killed a Chicago restaurant customer as the result of an argument over paying a bill. I will say that he passed the bread basket strictly according to regulations.

Small Proportion Real Criminals.

I wondered how many of those huddled in that great hall were saying to themselves "Never again"? Just how many of them were groping mentally or were hampered in their attempts to get along "outside" by some physical derangement? How many of them had long ago repented for the thing they had done under the stress of temptation or in the heat of passion and longed for a chance to start all new and redeem themselves? How many of them had been such criminals as imagination conjured—shadowy forms crouching at dark alley edges, scowling faces at bedroom windows in the night, masked gun men at cashiers' cages? How many of them were as well fed and housed on the "inside" as they had ever been on the "outside"? How many of them were taking their stay as just an incident in their existence—how many were wearing their hearts out?

One might question on and on, but here they were, just men—just men with the false glamour or the grewsomeness of their crimes showing only on the records—just men, looking like other men who eat and sleep and work and plan.

"There's about 20 per cent of 'em out and out criminals," ventured my cellmate during the interval that we were locked in our cells that noon to give the street clothed keepers a chance to get their own dinner. "Eighty four out of every hundred of them make good on leaving, if they are given a fifty-fifty chance. You will even find a lot of them, criminal at heart, who come to the conclusion that crime don't pay. Warden Zimmer's idea, as I get it, is to protect society on the outside and benefit the fellow on the inside. I figure this correspondence school course is going to help my self-respect when I get outside and there ain't much chance without self-respect. I agree that you can help a fellow so much that you make him helpless, but you can pull a fellow up out of a hole so that he can go his way alone. There are those who don't want to give a man in here any chance, and there are those who want to give him too much leeway. I guess there's got to be something between those two ideas. I hate maudlin sentiment; I hate being patronized. I'd advise you to get into one of these correspondence school courses."

Former "Terrors" Weaving Chairs.

I was tried out at two jobs that afternoon—rock quarrying and chair weaving. The idea seemed to be to find for each man the job for which he was best fitted. Out in the warden's office was a stenographer who had come into the "big house" after he and his pal had killed three on the "stickup" job. He was in for life. When he arrived he had scarcely been able to read or write, but now he was taking dictation as fast as the letters could be shot at him.

Seated about me at the chair weaving job were other fellows in bluish gray who at one time or another, in the almost forgotten past and in the easily recalled recent past, had almost caused reigns of terror because of their desperado doings. My prison conversation with them had largely to do with how to "draw the cane through this way" and "twist it over here." Could Jesse James himself be brought back to life garbed in bluish gray and placed before you in the act of methodically weaving chairs I doubt if you would any more than give him a passing glance.

None but the unthinking cause trouble in the "big house." The keepers did not stand directly over us; there was really no need of their doing so. No one seemed inclined to shirk or "cut up." The chance to use a little initiative seemed to be doing the bunch good. Of course, if one wished to play the naughty child act—well, there was the dark closet waiting.

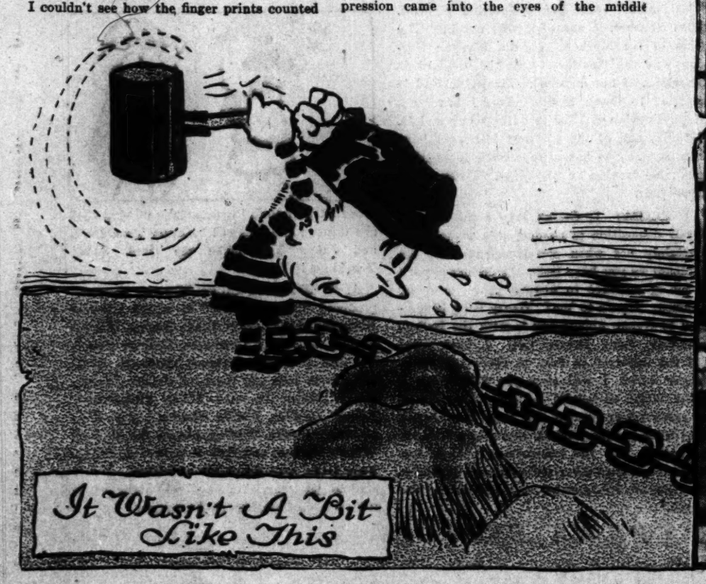
The One Hope of All.

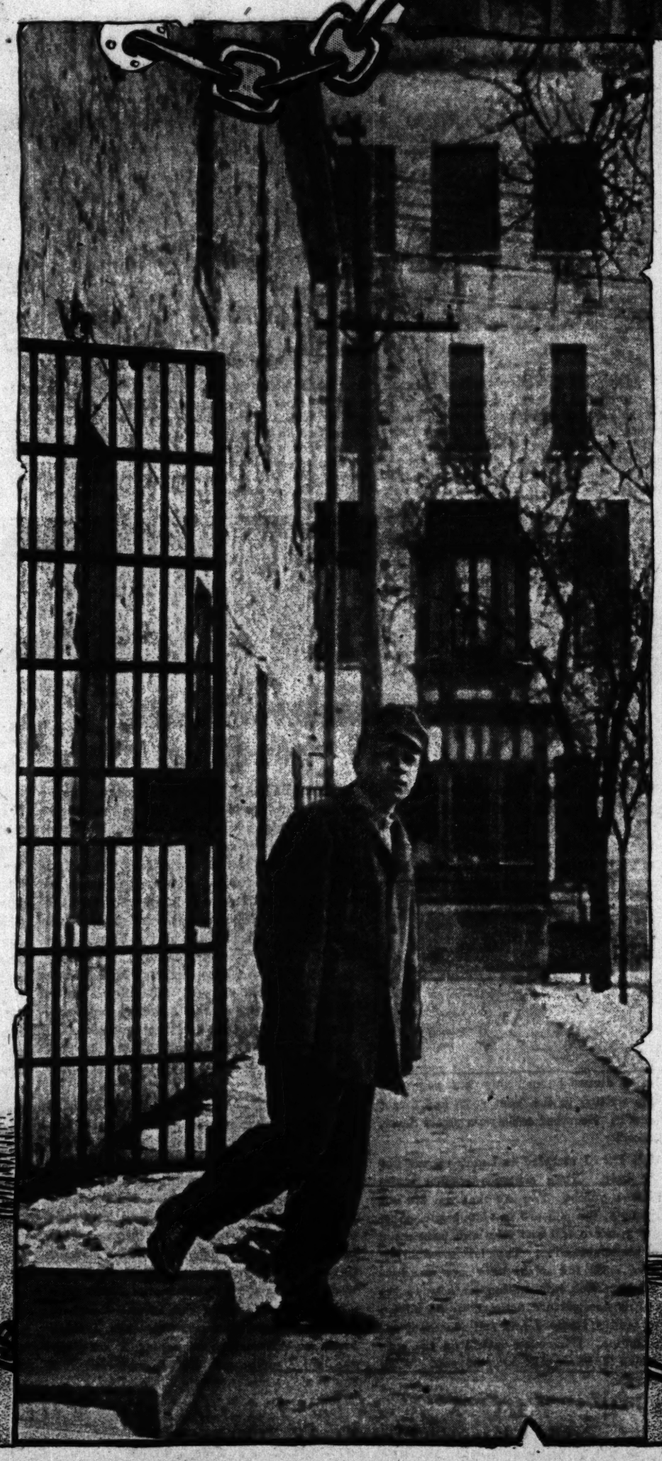
I was just beginning to get broken into the chair weaving job when it came time for an early supper and the lockup in our cell of the east wing again. Lit up at night, those four tiers of cells in the center of the great, dark corridor gave the impression of illuminated decks on a steamboat at night.

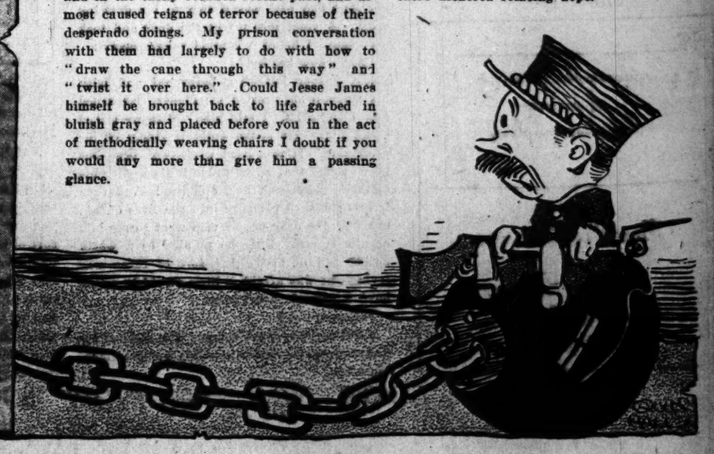
There were some eight hundred on board and they were spending the electric lighted hours, up until 9 o'clock, as excitingly as the four by seven inclosure would permit. Not all of them were studying correspondence school courses as was my cellmate. A good many of them were lying back on their bunks and apparently studying for the millionth time the accidentally chosen pictures that they had pasted as decorations for the whitewashed walls. Some of them didn't seem to care for any decorations, and some of them seemed to be merely tolerating such decorations as had been left there by former tenants.

Finally 9 o'clock came. The yellow light that had shone in the 400 barred doorways of the great east wing vanished at the twist of a keeper's thumb and finger. Silent before, the great east wing took on the deeper silence that goes with darkness.

Yes, it was dark for the time, but dawn would again creep through the corridor windows. And some day—some day—those thick, carefully guarded iron doors, one after another, would be swung open and there would be an opportunity to walk out into that world where just now April had begun to make itself felt—April, with its buds that were about to burst and grass that was beginning to get green. For in each heart beating with life there in the silent darkness, even in the hearts of those who were "doing all of it," there flickered solacing hope.







THRILL MAD McCUTCHEON FLIES IN A NIEUPORT

by Gordon Seagrove

He Made Life Miserable for the Lions in South Africa, Annoyed the Elephants to Death in the Jungles, Saw a Few Wars; and Dallied With Danger Whenever He Got the Chance—But He Likes Star Sailing Best.

WHENEVER any one wanted to get John T. McCutcheon, the famous cartoonist and writer, real excited, all he had to do was say, "John, there's a new thrill over in Kamchatka," or something like that, and right away McCutcheon would start packing his things and say, "Lead me to it."

They told him about lion hunting in South Africa and then they led him to it. For a long time it was a question whether McCutcheon would get the lions or the lions get McCutcheon. At any rate, the lions are fewer down Africa way now than they were when the cartoonist went junketing in that direction.

Then somebody said that elephant hunting was as much as a man's life was worth; that often, O, so often, men got tramped on by charging elephants and had to have their remains sent home in a pill box.

"Lead me there," said McCutcheon.

Well, they led him there, and although he had some narrow escapes he still has that pill box.

New Thrill in Air Trip.

This, too, in spite of the fact that since his lion and elephant hunting days he has had a hundred or more equally fascinating experiences that would chill the spine of the ordinary man. And now he has had still another that has quickened his pulse with an altogether new and delightful thrill.

He has flown in a Nieuport!

The famous cartoonist, who has gone sky sailing in almost every kind of a plane, always had an itch to ride a Nieuport because it is more dangerous, and recently during his stay at Saloniki during the mobilization of the Franco-British troops in the Dardanelles campaign his ambition was realized.

Now, a Nieuport plane is about half as big as the ordinary machine, has an engine of 180 horse power, and attains a speed of more than 100 miles an hour. That is, when running slow. Moreover, it is dangerous and tricky, so much so, in fact, that but few aviators and even then the most careful and experienced, can guide the tiny, fragile, unstable thing through the heights of blue. And perhaps less than a half dozen laymen ever rode as passengers, for with its wasplike wings and body the Nieuport is nothing for a comfortable cross country aerial jog. Their chief charm, it is easy to see, lies in the fact that they've broken more necks than half the gallows.

Just the same Mr. McCutcheon thought he'd like to try it and be one of the first, and with little difficulty obtained permission from the chief of the French aviation corps which was just outside of Saloniki.

More Efficient at High Speed.

Describing his sensations, Mr. McCutcheon said:

"As the engine began to turn over there was a deafening roar from the cylinders and the machine started, not like the average plane, slowly at first, then gathering speed, but all at once. Within 200 feet it had attained a speed that was almost unbelievable when one saw the objects on either side racing past. Then suddenly we took the air, mounting upward.

"When we had reached an altitude of several thousand feet the machine began a long, level course through the air. Every moment or two the outer planes would dip and tremble as the light machine caught the wind or felt an air pocket, but the aviator met each quiver with a steady hand, yet several times it seemed that the machine must capsize in midair. This was because we were not going at the high rate of speed when these machines prove most efficient.

"Suddenly, however, the pilot applied the power and the machine began to hurtle through the air. One hundred, one hundred and ten, one hundred and twenty miles per hour! Against our faces the wind rushed like it would flatten them out—this in spite of the wind shields that were part of the machine's equipment. Yet we seemed not to be moving but standing still instead, for at great heights there is no basis visible to the eye from which to judge speed—only the wind, shrieking into the ears, snatching tears from the eyes, and stopping the breath in the nostrils.

"Below, hazy, like a toy city on a curving hill, lay Saloniki, the harbor, the ancient fishing fleets; beside them, looking like bath tub boats, the bulldog fighting ships; and farther away the Vardar valley, the French and British camps with their long lines of white tents. The whole seemed stationary, and yet the Nieuport was going perhaps 130 miles an hour!

"Then suddenly the downward flight was begun—long drops and spirals, around and around, until we reached the ground after being up but twelve minutes."

Get into Motion Quickly.

It was during this downward flight that Mr. McCutcheon says he experienced a strange sensation, one of his strangest. So rapid were the plunges and spirals he lost for several moment all sense of direction or space and became dizzy. Finally, by fixing his eye and mind upon the horizon, he managed to adjust his senses to the wild plunges of the machine and thoroughly enjoyed the rest of the descent.

At the Saloniki camps Mr. McCutcheon saw four of these Nieuports, all equipped with rapid firing guns for use against scouting planes of the enemy. And once while visiting a camp he had the good fortune to see how quickly these wasps of the air may get into action.

At the camp on this particular day the aviators and the machine gun men were sitting around talking, smoking, when suddenly came the report that German or Austrian planes were on the way.

"Immediately," said the cartoonist, "everything became changed. The men dropped whatever they were doing and, smiling with excitement, two of the aviators leaped into their machines and began trying the engines. The machine gun men followed and tested their rifles; then with a popping of explosions and the whir of propeller blades the two Nieuports were off—all in less than five minutes."

On this occasion the rumor proved groundless, but on Dec. 29 Mr. McCutcheon saw two French machines engage one of the enemy's planes that had flown over to photograph the fortifications. The struggle took place at 5,000 feet in the air, and the enemy's plane was driven off, badly riddled with bullets.

Safe Till Bullet Hits Tank.

Mr. McCutcheon comments on the fact that so many machines get safely to earth after they have been fired on and hit in aerial encounters. In France he declares he has seen a great many military planes raked fore and aft with bullets, with parts of their body torn away by shells, and all of them got safely to earth. Aviators, he has been told, do not fear injury to the planes so long as the gasoline tank and engine are not harmed, for they can usually get to earth safely.

Previous to his Nieuport flight Mr. McCutcheon flew thirty-five minutes over Saloniki and the Vardar valley with Ricot, the French aviator, in his Farman, and while at a height of several thousand feet took a number of remarkable photographs.

But long before that he had sailed over the battlefields at Laon in a German double decker, hummed from Villa Coublay to Juvissy with Jacques Baudry, skimmed above Vera Cruz at the time of the trouble in Mexico, and taken other odd flights in America when aviation was almost in its infancy.

And those are just a few of his aviation "stunts." But inasmuch as Mr. McCutcheon is modest and simply won't ramble on about himself, it is necessary to turn to the chart of past performances to disclose a few of the other interesting things he has done. For instance:

In 1897 he started around the world in the revenue cutter McCulloch, joined Admiral Dewey at Hongkong, and participated at the battle of Manila bay; pierced the mystic fastnesses of India, Burma, Ceylon, Siam, Cochin-China, and China, where a posse of cutthroats would as lief kill him as say their prayers; covered the insurgent outbreak in the Philippines in 1899, and got a touch of fever for his pains before he finally went to Sulu to cover the treaty negotiations; tramped the Transvaal, and went into Abyssinia for a lion or two or a rhino here and there and maybe a dash of beri-beri fever; joined the Boers for a time in the Boer affair; took a hand in the Russo-Japanese war; saw places that no white man had ever been (or would want to stay if he had) when he traveled by caravan through the Caucasus, Armenia, and Persia until he reached Samarcand.

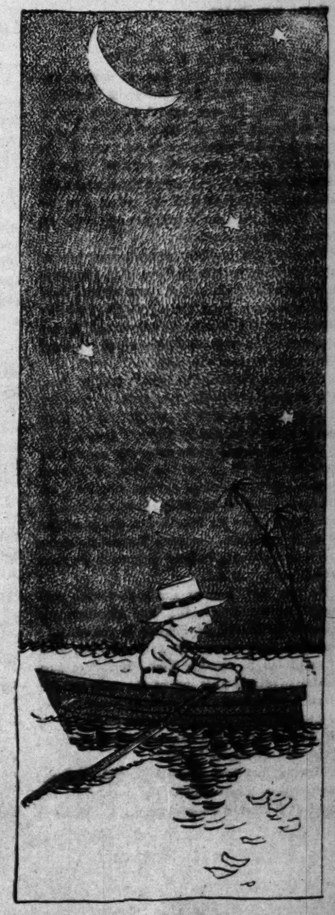
Thirsting for New Thrills.

These are but a few of his general adventures; the experiences that befell him on each of these journeys would make the hair stand on end for days and would fill books, which, by the way, Mr. McCutcheon writes as easily and as cleverly as he draws.

And now Mr. McCutcheon, away from the thrills and horrors of war but a few weeks, is a-thirst again for another adventure; he has a dream that he some day hopes to realize, a new series of thrills that he hopes to experience. He wants to sail the Spanish main and explore the south seas.

Not by steamboat, but in a schooner or a ketch of his own, touching at unheard of places, sticking his vessel's nose into turquoise bays where waters lap on coral shores and macaws scream their guttural alarm; places that slumber as they have slumbered always and know only the trend of an occasional white man. And some day he says he's going to realize this dream. But in the meantime there are so many thrills at hand to be taken care of, so many things to draw and write that the voyage into the blue domains of buried treasure must be forgotten until the world has quieted down and then—

Well, then John McCutcheon will set out on the real adventure.



CHARLES M. SCHWAB,

HE DIDN'T COME BACK! HE NEVER WAS AWAY!

by Burns Mantle

"As a Man Thinks, So He Is."

Charles M. Schwab does not believe in genius. "Many a man would prove a genius if he were given the right working conditions," he says.

He believes that the only way to get good work out of men is to make them interested in their work. He is strong for the "competitive interest" that makes a sort of game of commonplace toil.

He believes, first, a man should drill himself to be self-reliant and, second, that he should bend every effort on making himself indispensable to his employer. "I believe in the man who works for his employer as though he were working for himself."

He believes in college educations when they are possible, but he does not consider them necessary to the success of the business man. "It is difficult for a college man to concentrate his attention on his work. He thinks too much of his social obligations. Too often he would rather two-step than study."

He believes in early marriages. Largely because he married when he was 21 and his home life has been the most successful he has ever heard of.

He believes the greatest prod for ambitious men is encouragement, and he has little use for the man who does not respond to it.

He believes in unostentatious philanthropy, has educated a score of relatives, built clubs for his men, churches for his neighbors, and given liberally to many charities. But he does not like to have it talked about.

He is a liberal religionist of the Catholic faith (Mrs. Schwab is a Presbyterian), and has made it a point for many years to go to church with his mother on Christmas day. He does not smoke and never drinks, unless it be to sip a glass of light wine at his own table to make his guests feel comfortable.

He is a great believer in home atmosphere and home influences. For all the grandeur of their Riverside drive castle, Mr. and Mrs. Schwab live simply and normally. Their Sunday night dinners are famous for the interesting rather than the famous persons one meets there, though many of course, are both. Mme. Sembrich, the singer, is a frequent guest; so is Prof. Brashear, the astronomer; Archbishop Ireland, Father Zahm, J. E. Dodson, the actor, Judge Alton B. Parker, and Judge Morgan O'Brien. T. P. O'Connor, Lord Charles Beresford, and many other foreign notables have been Mr. Schwab's guests, and one interesting corner is hung with the autographed photographs of notables, including more than one crowned head.

I HAD been reading of Charles M. Schwab, "the man who came back." I went in search of Charles M. Schwab, the man who had never been absent. And I found him. Found him in the library of a castle that fronts the Hudson river at Seventy-third street, New York, and looms large across the block of ground that separates it from Riverside drive. The castle that cost a "king's ransom," they said at the time Mr. Schwab built it and gave it to Mrs. Schwab. Meaning four or five million dollars, I should say, without knowing more about kings or ransoms or luxurious homes than what I have read.

But primed and ready though I was to politely request the story of the man who could not "come back," seeing that he never had been away, I was struck dumb by the foolishness of the query. One fair glance at the leading ironmaster of these states and you know that to suggest even a temporary unfitness for any job, whatever it might be, would be silly.

If the competence that goes with a thorough grasp of the work in hand ever shone from the eyes of a man, it shines from the eyes of Mr. Schwab; if capability and capacity ever were suggested by a physical makeup, they are suggested by the solid figure of this man; and if the dynamic force that is popularly presumed to radiate from those born to lead was ever felt in the presence of one such radiator, then "C. M." is exhibit "A" in this class.

He smiled the smile that biographers call genial, inviting, rare, ingratiating, enigmatic, Mona Lisic. It is a smile that spreads just so far north and just so far south of the eyes. It barely reaches the wrinkles of the brow and has little if any effect on the corners of the determined mouth. It flashes, as the light of an incandescent when the switch is turned, and darkens as quickly. It is a smile that could easily lead a troubled employé to cease trembling, take a seat, and cross his legs comfortably preparatory to a good long chat about the grievance he had come to discuss. And I can imagine its going out with a click, so quickly and so completely as to bring the same employé to his feet with a jump, the while he tried to scrape his wits together and remember what it was he had come to say.

It is the smile of a pleasant leader of men who likes to smile but doesn't purpose making a time wasting habit of it; an honest, friendly smile that there is no resisting and no misunderstanding once you catch the flash and transformation of it. I know that smile. The most successful publisher who ever refused a manuscript of mine smiled that same way, and I was in the elevator going down before I was fully conscious that his refusal was not altogether a compliment.

Never Talks of the War.

You may picture him, then, as a most approachable, a most democratic, a decidedly likable man. Having agreed to give you a part of his evening, even though a bridge game is awaiting his return, he is as good as his word and better than his promise. He is yours to command—so long as the command is reasonable. And then if he refuse you he does it with that smile and you are quite as pleased. As an instance:

We suggested politely, as a reporter person is likely to do in the presence of a manufacturer of armor plate and ammunition, that some expression from him as to the probable duration of the European war would be interesting. The smile flashed on—and off—and I knew the subject was cold.

"You can realize, I'm sure," said he in a soft, singing voice—he was quite a vocalist as a young man and knew his barber shop chords as well as any of them—"that a man in my position has to be extremely careful of what he says at a time like this. Whatever he says, or is quoted as saying, may do a lot of harm. If he is optimistic it is accepted as a certainty that he has 'inside information.' If he is uncertain, doubtful, depressed—there are those who are willing to gamble on that indication."

So you may take it for a fact that any quoted statement on the war situation attributed to Charles M. Schwab is unauthentic and keep your money out of the market. This thought led to another that lifted that particular evening's visit out of the ordinary run of such experiences and made it worth while. It brought us naturally to a consideration of all the stuff that has been printed concerning "the man who came back."

Having just been through it, following our campaign of preparedness for this visit, the mass of it flashed chronologically through our mind. The first eulogistic stories of the freckled faced lad who drove his father's stage from Loretto to Creston, Pa., for 50 cents a week, shifted to a grocery job at $3, went into the Edgar Thompson works of the Carnegie company as a stake driver with the engineering crew at $1 a day, became head of the gang, rebuilt a lot of furnaces, and was made assistant manager.

The columns that repeated this list of achievements a few years later when calling attention to the man who had just been made superintendent of the Homestead mills. Later when he was made manager, then a member of the board of managers, and finally president of the vast Carnegie Steel company.

The pages of guff and good will that followed when the same youth, arrived now at national prominence in his thirty-ninth year, was elected president of the billion dollar steel trust at a salary variously reported at any sum from $500,000 and half the profits to $1,000,000 flat.

And after that, the deluge.

Stories That Stick.

You will recall the hectic first page yarns of trouble in the directorate of the steel trust that was always about to break through; the bulging, black faced accounts of the shipbuilding corporation that sought to make your dear old Uncle Sam a partner in a business that he probably now wishes with all his heart he had gone into; reports of the threatened physical collapse of Mr. Schwab and his sailing for Europe to recuperate.

If you remember nothing else, the stories of his "wild gambling" on the continent will stick with you. They are the stories that always do stick. Of how he was running about the gaming rooms in Monte Carlo tossing thousand dollar bills on to the roulette tables and grinning fiendishly each time he broke a bank. Of how J. P. Morgan, acting as his boss, had cabled a report of these scandals and added: "Naughty, naughty!" or "Charlie, do not let me hear of this again!" or some such parental injunction.

Followed shortly by that other series concerned with his return home, his resignation from the trust, "forced," so they said, "by Mr. Morgan, who was displeased with his actions abroad," and finally of his taking over the Bethlehem Steel company in an effort to retrieve his position in the business world.

Poor Mr. Schwab! I don't presume his entire bank account totaled more than $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 then, and he growing old and useless, too, being all of 42!

"Have you ever tried to separate the fiction from the facts in these recurring stories?" I asked.

"No," he smiled. "There isn't much use in trying to do that. And most of the stories are so trivial they don't matter. Any man who is much in the public eye is bound to attract the attention of the newspapers, and they tell me even news has to be made interesting." But he didn't smile as he said it.

I gather from my own observation that there are a few subjects on which Mr. Schwab is a bit set in his mind. One of them is Mrs. Schwab. She was the sweetheart of his youth, and her position in their home is still firmly established on that basis. They have no children, which draws them into even a closer companionship. They have worked out every problem that has come into their lives together.

When they were married, which was as soon as they could afford it after Mr. Schwab had taken his job in the Edgar Thompson works (it was in 1883 and he was 21 years old, to be exact), one of the first things they did was to rig up a laboratory in what might have been the spare room. Mrs. Schwab, who was a Miss Eurania Dinkey, came of a family of workers, and was as interested in steel as her young husband, and studied chemistry to help him. The foundations of their every achievement, therefore, she has helped to lay. As a direct consequence their home life has been a supremely happy one.

Bethlehem Not for Sale.

Parenthetically, as I was leaving the Schwab home we were standing in the picture gallery. "Not a great collection," said he, "but I think an interesting one," indicating a Titian, a Franz Hals, two or three Rembrandts, a glorious Turner, a fine Corot, and a dozen other perfect selections. At the head of the room was a full length picture of Mrs. Schwab, a kindly, wholesome, dignified face, surmounted by a pompadour of hair just turning gray, as is that of her husband. Looking at the picture and thinking of their future, I asked:

"Have you any thought of retiring, Mr. Schwab?"

"No-o," he answered, as though, in fact, the thought had occurred to him, but had been settled. "No, I think not. I was this year offered more money for Bethlehem than I had any idea would ever be offered me. It was, in fact, so colossal a sum that I was forced to consider it. I told Mrs. Schwab about it 'If I take it,' I said, 'half of it is yours. Shall I do it?'"

"'No,' she said. 'I wouldn't know what to do with the money and you couldn't get along without the works. So we'll stay as we are.'"

And that was the answer. The offer, as every one knows, though no one connected with the Bethlehem will admit it, was made by the German government. There may have been, deep in the corners of their hearts, a patriotic impulse that recoiled at the thought of aiding the enemy of, if not their own people, at least their loyal friends, the British.

Foolish, Funny, and False.

But to get back to our stories. There were many that were just silly. One that he was building a swimming pool at his new summer home in Cresson, Pa., that was to cost $150,000 and make a piker of Lucullus, most luxurious of Romans, who could only scare up 12,000 sesterces for his. "They must have seen the fountain in the front yard and thought we were going to swim in that," remarked Mr. Schwab. There was another that during his "wild" days in Europe he had agreed to pay $60 a plate for all snapshots that were likely to embarrass him, an incident of which he had never heard.

There was a story that he once had bet a friend $50 against his (the friend's) trousers that he could beat him at billiards, and that, winning, Mr. Schwab took the pants. "Yes, I did that," he admitted, as we were about to pass on, the famous smile broadening into a laugh at the recollection. "He went home in his overcoat."

There was a story that he had played the piano and sung for Mr. Carnegie, thus cementing their friendship at their first meeting. Nothing at all like it. Mr. Carnegie had never heard him play. That may be why they are still such good friends. There were yarns about his being guarded by detectives, about the house we were in costing $10,000,000 and being practically surrounded by Pinkertons; stories of his being spirited away to California and reported in a dying condition in a stock jobbing conspiracy; a lot of stories that he always sailed for Europe under an assumed name to escape reporters, once as Alexander McDonald, again as James H. Ward. Mr. Ward is his secretary and a partner in Bethlehem; McDonald a clerk in the office who made that particular reservation.

There was a story that continued for several weeks, despite his denials, that he was about to establish a residence in Nevada and buy his way into the senate. None of these was true, and few had even slight foundation in fact. He patiently listened and as patiently tried to remember what grounds there were, if any, to explain their creation.

Why He Quit Steel Job.

But when we came to the series declaring his resignation from the steel trust to have been forced by Mr. Morgan and to be traceable directly to his unconventional performances abroad he became suddenly earnest. It was an old story, but still one that irritated.

"You will find," said he, "that no matter how strongly you deny that story it will still be believed. There is not and never has been a word of truth in it. I had no word from Mr. Morgan at that time or any other concerning my personal actions. The subject of what I had done or had not done was never mentioned in any meeting of the steel company's directors. Two years before I resigned from the steel company I acquired control of the Bethlehem company and wanted to devote myself to it exclusively. To prevent me doing that Mr. Morgan bought the company from me and held it. When I finally insisted that my resignation should be accepted he sold it back to me at the same price he had paid for it.

"The truth of that whole affair is extremely simple. As president of the Carnegie Steel company I had been an autocrat. Mr. Carnegie trusted me implicitly. We were successful and I had grown accustomed to working under those conditions. When the steel trust, so-called, was formed and I was made its president, I found that I had something like twenty different bosses. Each director thought he should have something to say as to how the company should be run. I did not believe a successful business could be conducted in that way and there was more or less conflict as a result. Finally I became so harassed that my health was threatened and I went abroad. When I returned I insisted that my resignation should be accepted forthwith. Holding Mr. Morgan to his promise to sell Bethlehem back to me, I started the rehabilitation of that company and have been at it ever since.

"I have never taken a cent from the company, and until a month ago I refused to permit a dividend to be declared. Another thing, there is not a cent of Mr. Carnegie's money in Bethlehem and never has been. Thinking to help me, he at one time asked Mrs. Schwab if she would not induce me to let him buy every share of stock that I personally did not own, that I might have a clear field to carry out my own ideas without so much as a suggestion from others. I told him that our friendship had grown too intimate and too dear to me to have it again mixed with business. Mr. Carnegie, to me, is the most wonderful man in the world. I love him as a father, and I know he regards me as a sort of adopted son."

Gives Credit to Partners.

He did not say it, but the thought back of the reference to Bethlehem I knew to be that it was his child, born of his brain and his industry, and raised to a perfect manhood by the untiring devotion of its parent. So the Bethlehem "boys" will tell you—that group of sturdy young men Mr. Schwab took from the ranks and made partners with him in the building up of the business. But it is to them that Mr. Schwab gives the credit.

"Genius," he said, "isn't given a man at birth. It is created of opportunity and determination. Bethlehem is a success, not because of me, but because of those young men who have worked with me as my partners. Not one of them came from the Carnegie company. I found them all in Bethlehem. Give a man something to work for, make his work interesting to him, and he will develop a 'genius' for it fast enough."

And, it might be added, not one of the fifteen "boys"—they are now the fifteen directors of Bethlehem—has failed to make good. It may not be genius that helps him to pick men, but it is something mighty like it. That, coupled with a real love of work, a very intense passion for the thing he is doing, whether it be work or play, and an inherent love of competition probably lies at the basis of his success.

"Competitive interest," he said at another time during the evening, "is needed to give men an interest in their work. There was one mill when I was with the Carnegie company that was way below the others in the number of heats recorded a day. I took the matter up with the superintendent. He could not tell why. So far as he could see he ran his mill the same as other superintendents ran theirs. He coaxed his men, or cursed them, or pleaded with them, but with no result. It was at the end of the day and the night shift was just coming on. I had an idea. Borrowing a piece of chalk, I asked the man how many heats the day force had made. He said six. I chalked a large six on the floor and went away.

"Next morning, passing the same mill, I noticed the six had been rubbed out and a seven written in its place. The next day the seven was gone and a ten loomed large. The rivalry was started, an interest awakened, and before the end of the month that mill was near the head of the list and every man working in it proud of the honor."

Success Not Due to War.

Another incident which illustrates his attitude toward his men and the feeling of the men toward him is one he delights in telling himself. He is, by the way, a natural and forceful public speaker and is in great demand at the biggest banquets of the year in New York.

On one of his tours of inspection Mr. Schwab devoted much time to an effort to interest the men he talked to in the study of the steel industry from a scientific, as well as a practical standpoint. He wanted them to progress, to expand, to become more valuable to the work and to themselves. And at the conclusion of each address he would say:

"And now, if there is any one present who would like to ask me any question I shall be glad to answer it."

He looked expectantly out over the audience and recognized a large man in the back of the house, who had risen slowly to his feet.

"Charley," this chap called out; "what's a good cure for warts?"

When Mr. Schwab took the Bethlehem company over it was losing in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 a year. "What Krupp's is to Germany I shall make Bethlehem to America," he said. Steel men laughed at him. "Charlie," they said, "is through."

"Today," wrote a New York Herald investigator who had totaled his findings after a visit to South Bethlehem last September, "the Bethlehem Steel corporation is the largest producer on earth of armament and the finer grades of steel. Its principal plant at South Bethlehem, Pa., is the greatest ordnance works, public or private, in the world. Its principal owner, Mr. Schwab, is the largest individual employer in the western hemisphere. Its output had surpassed Krupp's before the swords of Europe were unsheathed. It stands forth as the greatest individual industrial achievement of this or of any other century."

"Before the swords of Europe were unsheathed." Take note of that. Neither the Bethlehem success nor the Schwab success back of it is a wartime success. It was earned before war was thought of and long before Mr. Schwab ever smiled into the eyes of a worried king or slipped a war contract into his inside pocket. The war has added tremendously to the success, of course. It alone has built a munitions factory with a capacity of 1,000,000 rounds of field artillery ammunition a month—just about a hundred times the total capacity of all the United States government manufactories combined. It alone has taught the Schwab force how to turn out and ship twenty completed submarines to England within five months, which it did a year ago.

And—consider well this point—if the time ever should come that this country is called upon to repel an invasion—what greater asset can be imagined than this wonderful factory?

Yet, under ordinary conditions, it will be torn down the day they sign the peace treaty in Europe. What else can be done with it? Ask Mr. Roosevelt and we wager he will insist it should be taken over by the government and kept ready as a possible need and a constant warning to those who may grow jealous of us. And we can think of nothing in the line of preparedness arguments that would sound more reasonable.

Big Navy Would Block Invasion.

Some one said, not long ago, that with things as they are at present any good, lively enemy could invade this country, take the Atlantic seacoast and push our defenders as far west as Pittsburgh. After which the fighting would be over because the invaders would have possession of 80 per cent of all our munition factories, public or private.

Though he didn't care to talk war, I asked Mr. Schwab if he had seen that statement. He had. "But if our navy is increased to a proper size I don't believe there will be much danger of that," he said.

Rumblings of discontent in the whist room were becoming audible. Even the amiable Dodson, who knows more about the value of leading from the top of a short suit than any one, was showing signs of nervousness. I looked at Mr. Schwab to see if I had overstayed my welcome. The smile was still in evidence. But I arose.

"Do you play whist?" he inquired, politely, just as though I had dropped in from the apartment above and we were not sitting in the library of one of the most beautiful homes in the world, and yet most homelike for all its grandeur.

"My wife says not," I answered, truthfully, moving gingerly across $30,000 worth of rug.

"She is like my caddie," he admitted. "'Caddie,' I said to him, 'did you ever see any one play golf worse than I do?'

"'No, sir,' said he."

It is no surprise to learn that every one about the Bethlehem offices addresses Mr. Schwab as "C. M." or "Charlie." His is the democracy that counts, because it is real. He held my coat for me, and I almost called him "Charlie" myself.

Up the Ladder of Success with Charles M. Schwab.

When he was 5 years old he could pick out a tune on the piano. Which is not important save as an indication of the accuracy of his hearing and the firmness of his touch.

At 7 he could do all sorts of sums at school, which tickled the Franciscan Friars who taught him.

At 12 he went to work for his father (who had sold a woolen manufacturing business and bought a livery stable), driving a stage from Loretto to Cresson, Pa.

At 15 he had bettered his local reputation as a mathematician in the study of civil engineering and incidentally taken a job as clerk in a grocery store at Braddock.

At 18 his opportunity came when Captain Bill Jones gave him a job as a stake driver in one of the Carnegie mills, for which he was paid $1 a day.

At 20 he was manager of that mill and at 25 superintendent of the more important Homestead plant at a salary of $50 a week and a bonus of 50 cents a ton over a production of the previous year.

At 35 he had made himself so indispensable to the Carnegie interests that at Mr. Carnegie's order he was named to succeed John A. Leichman as president of the Carnegie company.

At 39 he was made president of the famous billion dollar steel trust, known officially as the United States Steel corporation, at a reported salary of $1,000,000 a year.

At 43 he resigned and bought the Bethlehem steel corporation, because he wanted a company all his own to do with as he would.

And now, at 53, he finds himself the greatest and richest ironmaster in the world; a bigger steel man than Carnegie, a greater producer than all the Krupps of Germany.

Reading which, it is easy to understand why James Creelman, who had in his day interviewed more famous men, probably, than any other newspaper correspondent, declared Charles M. Schwab to be one of the three or four really big men of the world.

Herewith is presented the sixth installment of a fiction serial dealing with what might happen should European powers, after they had settled their own differences, wage war upon the United States. The author, one of the best fiction writers in the country, has based his story upon a thorough understanding of military, naval, and internal conditions in the United States and upon a sound knowledge of military and economic history. The story will cause you to realize the critical situation in which this country and you, your neighbors, and your family are placed by the let-well-enough-alone attitude of the pacifists.

SYNOPSIS

In Elgin, Ill., live the Ashby family, consisting of Nathan Ashby, owner of the Ashby Brass company, and his wife; a daughter, Nellie, married to Bob Wendell, a navy lieutenant, and Jim Ashby, a son, engaged to Agnes Ware. Nathan Ashby is the archetype of pacifist, deaf to the warnings of the imminence of danger to America, and his deafness in this respect is shared by his son. They are impatient with Bob's refusal to resign from service and take a more lucrative job with a business concern. In the Ashby works there are two foreign chemists, Ingouf and Enloe, experts in their line. Their night work and the discovery of an incendiary bomb in the brass works arouse Bob's suspicions. While driving down a lonely road with Jim they discover the two chemists on motorcycles ahead of them. Thinking they are being trailed, the chemists hurl bombs back at the car and a revolver battle ensues. Ingouf is killed by one of his own bombs, but Enloe escapes.

Lieut. Barrett of the U. S. Scout Cruiser Salem has, in defiance of orders to proceed to Haiti with two of the government's representatives aboard, steamed east in the north Atlantic and encountered the fleet of the former European enemies. The foreign fleet fires on the Salem—a deliberate act of war—and a one-sided battle results in the sinking of one of the enemy's largest ships and then of the Salem, but not before the number and class of ships comprising the fleet and the fact that they had fired the first shot have been wirelessed back to Washington.

Bob Wendell is notified to report at Newport News, and after bidding farewell to Nellie he is driven to Chicago by Jim. After Bob is gone Jim takes out the torn scrap of paper found on the body of Ingouf, which revealed the fact that Ingouf and Enloe were spies who had received orders for their duty at the outbreak of war. With the address "S. D. Marlatt, Insurance building," on the torn envelope in mind, Bob seeks the building, feeling that "Marlatt" is the chief of the prince regent's spies. Some one is in the office, and as he makes his way in he hears others coming up the stairway. As he switches on the light a revolver spits its flame in front of his face; he fires back, but a heavy blow upon his head fells him. He regains consciousness to find himself lying on a couch, guarded by one of the agents. He feigns unconsciousness while the agents try to revive him.

While Bole, the guard, is trying to bind Jim, the latter throws a noose about Bole's neck, overpowers him, leaves him bound in the room, and locks the door. He investigates the house, finds a group of men and women sending out insurance solicitations, with orders written on them in invisible ink, and then moving down the hall finds a telephone. He finds Marlatt's office number in the telephone book, but notices that the telephone is not the same as Marlatt's residence telephone number in the book. He telephones Marlatt's office and Sibert, the U. S. secret agent, answers the phone. When Jim has satisfied Sibert that it is really Jim Ashby at the other end of the wire, Jim tells the secret agent what has happened to him, and Sibert answers that the house will be traced through the phone company offices and a squad of detectives will be at the house in a few minutes. The spies find the door to the room in which Jim was locked; confusion reigns within while the spies batter down the door, and confusion without while Sibert's men close in on the spies. A girl, well known socially as a debutante, enters the room as Jim is taking away the spies' papers, and as Jim is moving from the table with drawn revolver, demanding that she keep back, she rushes at him, daring him to shoot her.

[Copyright: 1916: By The Tribune Company.]

HE skipped back to the curtain over the window, and as she reached him he fired. The firing did not frighten her. He had pointed the revolver far to one side to avoid all chance of hitting; she saw this before he shot, and she laughed at him, tauntingly, as she seized his hand. He dropped the revolver and tried to throw her off, but she held him. A man rushed up to help her; it was the young man in evening clothes. Jim threw the girl back from him, and as the man came Jim caught him with a fist under the jaw; but the man came on and grappled at the same moment that the girl tripped Jim and he crashed back against the window, shattering the glass about him and the man who fought with him.

The girl cried out shrilly as the glass smashed on the floor; then she stifled her cry, and as Jim struggled with his antagonist he felt the girl's small, tense hands seizing him. He was rolling on the floor amid the broken glass with the man who had grappled him, when a pistol shot rang out in the street; another replied from beside the house; now there were shouts all about and a whistle blew. As Jim wrestled and rolled over below the window, from outside a man smashed in the rest of the glass and stepped in; a window farther down the room was burst open and, as another man appeared, the lights in the salon went out; in their place a flame flared suddenly from the center of the room and jumped from rug to table and to the hangings before the door; and Jim, as he gasped for breath, sucked in the fumes of gasoline.

The man with whom he was wrestling was trying no longer to hold him; instead the man now was struggling to get away, and Jim was the one who was holding. The girl no longer interfered. Now Jim made out Sibert's voice calling commands to his men in the burning room, and Jim's antagonist weakened in his fight.

"Ashby! Where are you?" Sibert's voice called. "Ashby!"

Jim answered and Sibert was beside him. Jim stood up with his prisoner as Sibert's men completed their capture of the house, and, bringing buckets of water, darkened the room again as they extinguished the flames which the spies had started.

VIII.

THE CALL FOR A MILLION MEN.

"War! President fears war! Army and navy chiefs in all night council at White House! President fears war!" the scream of a newsboy echoed in the street. It was dawn. A gray glow spread over the sky from the east, and the moon, yellow and bright a few moments before, became whiter and dimmer. The street lamps went out, and garish were the electric lights which showed the ruin of the salon in the house of the spies. Two police motor wagons, backed before the door, were removing the men and the women caught in the house, except the girl who had struggled with Jim Ashby and one of the men who had been on guard. An ambulance already had taken the girl to a hospital, where a surgeon would repair the artery in her arm cut by the broken glass. The body of the guard was to be removed later.

In the dining room Jim Ashby and Sibert spread upon the table the letters which had been saved. There were only scraps or charred bits in addition to the bundle of undamaged papers which Jim had saved; the spies had succeeded in burning or otherwise destroying all the rest. Sibert sponged the sheets of paper with a chemical solution which he had brought, and between the lines ow typewriting sentences of script came out in clear, brown characters.

"How many more letters were there?" Sibert asked.

"I got maybe a fourth of those in sight."

The secret service man gazed down at the letters grimly. "These are a quarter of the orders they were sending out from here! Ashby, think of this sort of thing going on all over the country this morning! Look at what they were telling their men to do! My God, the prince has given more thought to the organising of his spies to watch our volunteer army than the president has given to preparing the organization of the army itself!"

". . . and immediately following the call for volunteers you will offer yourself and enlist and thereafter as ordered communicate the details of numbers, equipment, morale, location, and probable destination of the force to which you are attached. . . ."

Jim saw again in the letter lying before him this paragraph which he had read on the scrap of paper from Ingouf's pocket; he read it on the page lying further along the table, upon the next and the next. And its repetition somehow stirred him more than the different directions of villainy enjoined at the start of each note of instructions.

"They were ordering a man named Vettis in Aurora to join an Illinois aviation division," Jim told Sibert. "I heard the order given; but his letter seems to be lost."

Sibert added the name to the list he was making. Jim caught his shoulders in appeal. "You'll take me with you now, Sibert, when you go to get those men?"

The secret service man shook his head. "You've done your bit in regard to those men," he motioned toward the letters on the table. "Other men can arrest them better than you can. But for the rest—the agents whose letters were burned and the others like them, Ashby—we're going to need every loyal man we can get, and we're going to need them in our army. That's where most of our friends the spies seem to be going. So join the army, Ashby. The enemy seem to be expecting a call for volunteers by morning. Go home, where you know most of the men who'll be in your battalion; get into the army and remember what you saw here this night!"

Jim drove down to the center of the city in a car with some of Sibert's men; he found his roadster still at the curb around the corner from Marlatt's office. He took his car and drove it down the streets which led to the road for Elgin. At daybreak the business district was as deserted and silent as three hours before; a few wagons, bringing in vegetables and garden truck to the commission houses near the river, and a number of grocers' carts, bound to the same places to buy for the day, passed on the streets; their drivers shouted to each other and to Jim a word of astonishment at the news in the early morning extras.

Now Jim was driving between rows of flat buildings where windows were open and from which men in bathrobes and women in kimonos and with hair disheveled about their shoulders called to each other across areas and courts and shouted to the passerby for news. Now paper boys were again rousing the block ahead of Jim and, in a minute more, he had reached the corner where he had encountered the factory hands. The factory windows and sky panes were all yellow from the electric lights within; the day was not yet bright enough for the mechanics to work by its light; and the second night shift was still at work. Men loafed on the street and crowded sullenly about the fronts of saloons. These men stared with hostility at the automobile and some of them shouted jibes. A rock clattered against a mudguard and Jim, without increasing his speed, went past.

On his way to the city a few hours before Jim had associated hostility and treachery at home with such men and with others like Ingouf and Emloe; but now, as he passed these men, he thought of those of them who were treacherous only as the subordinates and agents of men of his own class—of Marlatt and his associates in the spy system of the prince regent. He was glad when he was beyond the district of the foreign factory workers; but how would he be sure of any men after this night? If there were spies in his father's factory, at home, and in such homes as that home in Chicago, and if such girls as she who fought with him were traitors to the country, who could be sure of his neighbor?

The man came on and grappled—

He ran rapidly past the houses of a little suburban village undisturbed yet by the alarm of war. Milkmen were bringing their bottles to the little houses and here and there some one, who had arisen early to work among his flowers, gazed in curiosity at the speeding car. Jim ran by farms and as he glanced over the fields he saw that no one was at work. It was well past time for the farm people to be about, but they were still in their houses or in little groups on the porches. The car approached a farm house which stood near the road and a tall man came from the house and hailed Jim. "Hello! Hello, there!" he shouted. "Hey, have you heard the news?"

Jim stoped his car short. "Yes! The president called his cabinet and army and navy people at midnight. It looks like war!"

"Looks like it!" the farmer bawled back. "It is war!"

"They've declared it?" Jim cried; he stood up in his car.

"War!" the farmer called back. "Yes; they've declared war! The telephone people are calling every one and telling us! War! By God, stranger, we're at war! Everything was all right last night——"

Jim leaped down from his car and ran toward the farmer who gazed at him, observing his torn clothes and his bruised face without comment; the farmer led Jim into the house, continuing:

"And I was saying to Annie—she's my wife—'It's all blown over again, like it always has. The old U. S. A. is safe and sound and's going to keep out of trouble.' And now we're at war. Come in, stranger! They're still saying it, ain't they, Annie? Come in, friend; listen to it yourself!"

The farmer led back into the hall; a woman, a tall boy and a young girl, and two smaller children were standing there trembling in their excitement. They stared at Jim but asked him no questions; with such news as was coming in over the telephone wire, the state of a stranger stirred no curiosity. The woman, who was at the telephone, turned to Jim and handed him the receiver. Her eyes were wide and frightened.

"She's just beginning to say it again," the woman informed Jim. "You can hear it all, if you listen now."

Jim took the receiver. A girl's voice was speaking with the slow, distinct enunication of one accustomed to talk over the telephone; but the constraint and the care of her syllables could not banish the excitement from her tone. She evidently was at central and she had plugged in all lines to which she could talk at once; she was saying:

". . . radio message reached the capitol during the afternoon. It claimed to be from scout cruiser Salem, stating cruiser had sighted large battle fleet steaming for our coasts. Message said fleet immediately attacked Salem. No credence given this report until late hour when other information arrived confirming. Now is known that powerful fleet is approaching with hostile intent, having destroyed American cruiser, committing act of war against the United States. Information makes certain this was deliberate act, preliminary to general attack in force against this country. The president has therefore called upon armed forces of United States to oppose the enemy; has cabled for recall American ambassadors in countries hostile, and sent passports to diplomatic representatives here; president recognizes and proclaims that now exists between those nations and ours a state of war!"

The steady, constrained voice ceased; at the clamor of questions and exclamations from other listeners on the line, the girl's voice replied. "I will read you again the bulletin received; it contains all we know."

Jim put down the receiver and turned about. "What does it mean, mister?" the boy appealed to him. "You were coming from Chicago; was they saying war there?"

"War?" Jim repeated after the boy. They had been more than "saying" war; in Chicago, as on the road near Elgin, men had been performing acts of war, Jim knew; but he could not tell that to the boy then.

"Yes, it's going to be war, all right," he said. "I brought my brother-in-law, who's a lieutenant in the navy, to take a special train east at half past 2. The government has ordered east the sailors from the training station on the lake; I saw them get on the train." He related that hurriedly and went back to his car.

War! So it was declared; it was real! "Preliminary to general attack in force against the United States!" "The armed forces of the nation to oppose the enemy!"

Jim drove on. Men and women appeared in the fields now but stood in groups talking, gazing about, not able to go at once to their work. Jim reached his father's house, where the doors were still closed, the curtains were drawn. He put the car in the garage and went up to the house. His sister Nellie met him in the hall. She was quite calm, but her eyes were bright, and as he took her hand he felt it was cold.

"It's war, Jim!" she whispered to him. "Have you heard? It's war!"

"Yes; it's war, Nellie," he said and stared, unable to say more to her then.

"The telephone rang and told us about an hour ago," Nellie continued. "It woke father and when he heard what it was for, it made him furious. He's just got to sleep again. But, Jim, what's happened to you?" she observed with alarm the bruises on his head, the tears and cuts in his clothes, and the marks of struggle. "What have you been doing? You—you got Bob to the train all right?"

"Yes," Jim said. "I got Bob to the train; he got off. But, you see, before we started, we found—" He narrated to her, excitedly, all that had happened since he had seen Bob on watch at the factory. Nellie listened, less amazed than apprehensive; she trembled as she held to her brother and he told her of the fight in the road, the destruction of Ingouf, then of Jim's following the spies.

"So I've come back to enlist! Bob asked me to look out for you, Nellie; rather he said he knew he didn't have to ask me to look out for you. But I'm not going to stay in Elgin. I'm going to fight, too!"

Jim saw the blood now flame to his sister's pale cheeks as he felt it burning in his own. Then the flush was gone; another recollection had come to Nellie.

"Agnes telephoned just after we got the news, Jim."

"Agnes!"

"Yes. The telephone company called her house too and she wanted to speak with you. I told her where you had gone; and she wanted you to call her on the phone as soon as you got back—or come over to see her."

Jim's lips parted, then pressed tight together again. Thought of Agnes and particularly of their last agreement together had come too many times on the road home; and now, as Nellie spoke her name, there came to Jim—in reaction after his experiences of that night—the feeling of his hours alone with Agnes, the sensation of the soft, warm pressure of her lips upon his, her arms about his neck drawing his cheek down against hers, the serenity of their happiness as he held her relaxed within his arm.

Then, as a hundred times in the last hours, he saw before him Ingouf's reeking body beside the road; in his ears was the roar of the bomb which had almost destroyed Bob and himself, the resound of the pistol shots in Marlatt's office, the light, reckless laugh of the girl in the house of the spies, and, again, the letters of the spies with their writing in brown, "and you will enlist and thereafter as ordered communicate the numbers, location, etc." Jim's shoulders drew up sharply. "I cannot call Agnes now," he said to Nellie. "I will try to see her after a while."

But Agnes would not wait. It was more than an hour since the telephone bell had roused her and she had heard Martin's shout through the house, "Father! Mamma! Agnes! Say, we're at war! What do you know about this? Say, central's reading everybody a bulletin saying we're at war! There's been a fight already! Gee! We're at war!"

It was more than an hour since Agnes had gone back to her room after she had got Mart quieted; it was almost an hour since she had given up all idea of trying to sleep again and had gone to sit at her window looking out at the beauty and peace of the early morning.

"War!" How ugly the word! How horrible the thought! "War!" It had burst upon her when she was dreaming of her wedding with Jim and the trip they had planned and their home afterwards in happiness and in peace. "War!" She would not have it! She could not imagine it as a present condition, already active, betraying and threatening the existence of the state in which she lived; she could picture it only as a wrong, sinful, inhuman act in which no good person should participate; it was something distant, alien, and which could not come if Americans refused it. Jim had agreed with her that he would refuse it. But war! It had come, they said; already there had been a fight. The president was calling upon the armed forces of the country; that meant—Mart had proclaimed—that he would call this morning for volunteers.

Jim had promised her that he would not be among those to make war; but now she must be sure that he remembered and understood. She went downstairs and to the telephone for the second time.

Thus the ringing of the telephone bell again wakened Nathan Ashby from sleep; in heavy anger he went to the top of the stairs and stood there when he heard his son answering. Soon Jim came upstairs.

"What was Agnes talking to you about?" the father demanded.

"She wanted to speak with me about the war," Jim said.

"The war! Then what was that you were saying to her?"

Jim hesitated; then he faced his father. "She was reminding me that I had told her I would not enlist—that is, I would not enlist until every peaceful way of settling trouble had been tried."

"I see; and you said?"

"That the facts are so different from what we thought they were that nothing I said should bind me."

"Then you mean you're going to enlist?"

"Of course."

"Of course you won't! There won't be anything to enlist for. What we got a good navy for? Why in hell have we been paying out our good money to get a navy if it can't keep war away? Let the fools and loafers enlist if they want to sit about camp on government pay. You got something to do, and you're in a hell of a shape for work! Have you forgotten we begin work on that rush order of motor parts for Detroit this morning?"

"Father, I've had an experience since I've seen you. It started before Bob went away. He thought Ingouf and Enloe were spies and——"

"Sober up and wash your face and go to work!"

"And he proved it by——"

Nathan Ashby swung back to his room and slammed the door. Jim went on into his room, where he obeyed his father by bathing and changing his clothes. He was not conscious of weariness at all; instead, he felt the buoyancy of an excitement which he had never known before.

Upon his dresser stood a picture of Agnes; he gazed at it, lifted it to his lips and kissed it and then put it down and turned away. She did not understand yet what had happened any better than he had understood yesterday what was then going on. He turned to the booksbelves where were some of his boyhood stories, his school books and those he had studied at the university. Searching through these, he picked out a small blue bound book with the title on the back, "Infantry Drill Regulations." It was the little textbook supplied him at the state university to supplement the military drills required of all students during their first two years. He recollected the drill requirements—an hour and a half a week for the first half of the year, then three hours a week—a total of ninety hours altogether. What a formal farce he and his classmates had considered the "tin soldier stuff"; he had made it a point to take all his allowed "cuts" and, when playing football, had been excused from drill altogether. But this morning the drill meant something. He put "Infantry Drill Regulations" in his pocket as he went from his room.

The newspaper delivery boy was hurrying up the walk with the morning paper which had been held a little later than usual for the last "War Extra."

"A Million Men Called!"—the headline blared across the top of the front page. "A Million Men Needed for Immediate Service!"

The Teenie Weenies

RESCUE A HEN

By Wm. Donahey

ALL night long the rain poured down onto the roof of the Teenie Weenie house. It really came down by the bucketful, for one big raindrop would fill to the brim a Teenie Weenie bucket. The water spouts on the Lovers' bungalow and from the Shoehouse carried such quantities of rain to the cistern that it was quite filled and, in fact, overflowed. The tiny garbage pail, or the after-dinner pail, as the Lady of Fashion had politely named it, was washed off the kitchen porch down into the yard, and the Cook's best broom, which always hung by the door, had been carried quite away by the rain.

The storm stopped early in the morning and the Teenie Weenies hurried over to the Lovers' house and to the Chinaman's laundry to see if the downpour had injured their neighbors' homes.

The bungalow had not been hurt, but the laundry had not fared so well, for at least three thimblefuls of rain had poured down the spout of the teapot in which the Chinaman lived. The Teenie Weenies helped Chuck mop up the water and then all the little people set out to see what damage had been done by the rain to the surrounding country.

They found dandelions uprooted, great pebbles washed out of their places and huge lakes of water stood everywhere.

"Land sakes!" shouted the Old Soldier, who had climbed up onto an old tomato can in order to get a better view of the country, "there's a chicken coop over in the next yard, and it's surrounded by water, and jinks if there isn't a chicken in it."

At that moment the chicken caught sight of the Teenie Weenies and began to shout at the top of her voice. "Help! Help! Assistance! Assistance!"

The Teenie Weenies ran up to the coop as fast as their short legs could carry them, where they found the old hen's home badly flooded.

"Ain't this awful!" shouted the hen; "and me with the rheumatism and a settin' of eggs."

"Don't worry, madam," said the General, lifting his hat and making a deep bow. "We will do everything in our power to help you."

The General ordered the Teenie Weenies to bring up shovels and picks and soon the little workers made the dirt fairly fly out of the ground as they dug a deep ditch in order to drain the water from the old hen's coop.

The General had the pea pod canoe brought up and the Sailor paddled him over to the coop, where he tried to cheer up the mournful hen.

"My gracious," thought the General, as he looked up at the hen's big face high above him, "I never in all my life saw such a sad expression." But just at that moment a great change came into the hen's face. Her eyes grew very wide and, opening her yellow bill, she burst into a loud laugh. The General turned just in time to see the Dunce slip off the pebble on which he had been standing and fall into the water with a big splash. As the water was not very deep, only up to the Dunce's waist, he was able to get out without help.

"Well, I don't care if the Dunce did get wet," muttered the General. "He made the old hen laugh."

The Teenie Weenies drained the water from the coop, to the great delight of the old hen, who promised to give them the very first egg she laid.

But it means work! And it means some sacrifice!

You never got anything in the world that you desired greatly without exercising considerable effort in its direction, did you now? Keep this in mind when you start in to exercise and diet.

You can do wonders in a reducing way if you have the heart (and the stomach) to stick to it.

Just to prove to you what can be done by a woman who makes up her mind to get thin and to present to you a concrete example whose work of reducing you may follow to the letter, on Feb. 1 of this year I took a model, Mrs. Eva Lane of Chicago, who weighed 204½ pounds, and under the medical supervision and instructions of Dr. Lena K. Sadler of the Chicago Institute of Physiologic Therapeutics, in six weeks to a day Mrs. Lane was reduced to 168½ pounds. And today I present to you the program followed out the first week of reducing Mrs. Lane, the performance of which resulted in a loss of eight pounds that week.

In this work of reducing Mrs. Lane no gymnasium apparatus was used. No exercise was given her nor practiced by her that could not be done by any woman in any home in America (excepting the walking, of course, which naturally would be done out of doors). The exercises may be done on the floor or on a thick mat, or if you are extra ambitious you may pull the mattress off your bed—but they're just as effective done without the pads.

A great many women are willing enough to listen to advice about reducing to the extent of dieting only. And unquestionably, diet will reduce you if you go on a starvation diet. But you can't stay reduced unless you exercise as well as diet. Your flesh comes right back again if you haven't by exercise hardened your muscles against another attack. Exercise reteaches the body to develop muscle instead of fat. Beside, destroying fat without trying to rebuild the muscles leaves a wrinkled, weak, shriveled, ugly body.

I think it most advisable, if you are very heavy or if your heart action is not normal or your blood pressure high or you are suffering from some other physical disturbance, to see a physician before attempting any vigorous system of reducing. Every fat woman is not in physical shape to undergo strenuous work and diet, and more harm than good might come of the attempt.

During my first week's work with Mrs. Lane she reduced more than during any later week, which is a characteristic common to flesh reduction. This for several reasons: First, because the patient generally puts more vim and energy into the work at the beginning, and secondly, because this most excess flesh is the easiest to remove.

As with almost every obese woman, the greatest burden of fat was upon Mrs. Lane's waist, hips, and abdomen. So, these anatomical parts were the first points of attack.

The four exercises illustrated on this page practiced religiously and faithfully every day, beginning with five times each and increasing gradually every day up to fifty, seventy-five, and 100 times, proved their value, for in conjunction with the dieting the result at the end of the week, besides the eight pounds loss, was nearly two inches reduction in both waist and hips.

Mrs. Lane practiced these exercises between "rounds" of her regular household duties. She swept and dusted and ironed and cleaned, got meals for her family, and washed the dishes, and made the beds. Up at 7 in the morning, she had plenty of time to go through the exercises once in the morning, once in the afternoon, and once in the evening of the first day. Each time after exercising she took a shower bath, followed by vigorous rubbing, which not only served in the work of reducing, but kept her from getting too stiff and sore. Of course, the effects of this new work was felt by muscles that had been "loafing." But instead of letting her give in to them I kept her working harder at the exercises to get the stiffness out. During the first week if she felt tired and sore she took a hot bath, staying in the bath for about ten minutes, following this with a cold shower and a vigorous rubbing, and then lying down until thoroughly rested.

Beside the indoor exercise, Mrs. Lane walked a mile or two every day of this first week's work, and she practiced deep breathing as she walked.

Too much cannot be said about deep breathing as a remarkable factor in burning up fat. Deep breathe all you can—in the morning, in the afternoon, in the evening, and every time you think of it in between times. Mrs. Lane was especially attentive to this important feature of reducing.

And this is what Mrs. Lane ate the first week, each week a different diet being allowed her:

On rising—One glass of lemonade without sugar.

Breakfast, 8 a. m.—One lean slice of bacon or one inch square of cheese, one dry roll, and either one orange, apple, or peach; add coffee without sugar or cream.

Noon, 12 m.—Fresh fruit—one orange, peach, apple, or pear.

Dinner, 3 p. m.—One green vegetable (all she wanted to eat of it) prepared without butter, oil, cream or milk. Those allowed being spinach, onions, string beans, lettuce, celery, cresses, white cabbage, asparagus, cauliflower tomatoes, and radishes. One glass of either buttermilk, lemonade without sugar, or plain water sipped slowly.

Supper, 7 p. m.—Three ounces lean beef, mutton, lamb, or one soft boiled egg; one slice bread (bran or graham or dry toast or stale bread), but no butter; radishes; sour pickles.

This diet provided Mrs. Lane with 800 calories of food—more than which number of calories should not be indulged in by any woman wishing to reduce.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

Photos by Morrison.

Bicycle pedaling movement reduces thighs, buttocks, and hips: With both hands clasping right knee, toes stretched downward, bring knee up as far as you can and then forward, resisting as you push forward as hard as you can. Alternate with left knee. Begin by doing five times each.

THE unforgivable sin of the present day woman is avoirdupois.

You can be hollow eyed and pale of cheek, scanty locked or freckled face and "get away with it."

But if you're fat! ! ! !

You can't be stylish.

You can't be dainty.

You can't be graceful.

You can't be beautiful.

And you can't expect anybody to love you—because Cupid—like every other male being—believes if you won't try to get rid of your superfluous flesh, or, better still, try to ward it off, you don't deserve to be loved.

You don't have to be a target for all the puns of the family; you don't have to be unhappy because you don't look as well in your best clothes as your slender sister; you don't have to be unattractive very long if you once make up your mind you are going to get back your young waist and youthful vigor.

abdomen, calves, ankles. With both legs drawn up like left leg in illustration, first kick right up as high as you can, keeping toes stretched out. Do this five times with right; and five times with left, increasing daily up to fifty times.

For reducing back, abdomen, double chin. Stretched flat on your back with crown of head on floor, slowly raise head to position illustrated and back again, keeping heels on floor. Begin with five times, increasing daily up to fifty or more

Deep breathing exercise. Lie flat on your back with hands extended at sides. As you inhale a deep breath slowly raise arms above your head, as illustrated; then slowly exhale as you bring your arms back to original position.

MEN AND WOMEN

TO an impartial observer, "women in politics" have not come up to expectations. In fact, the "antis" have good cause to say "I told you so." We make no reference to a few isolated results or to scandals such as the Eaton-Rowe affair. The city election this year shows a decrease of interest and activity by the women.

The vote of the women has been much in the same ratio as that of the men. Of course, there were slight variations in different wards, but on careful study there seems to be no occasion for special compliments to the women.

Women in Politics.

It is true that in the February primary Ald. Kimball owed his nomination to the women, and he is a valuable man to the city. On the other hand, in many other wards the proportion of women voting for the less desirable candidate was greater than that of the men.

Taking the city as a whole, the women's vote varied little from that of the men. The significant thing is the great decrease in the number of women voting. There were 100,000 less women who voted this year than last, and 122,527 less women voted than registered this year. Does this mean that the novelty having gone, they are losing interest in the new toy? Some women say it is disgust. The result is the same. Women came into the political field to clean it up. Certainly, they cannot get far by deserting it at the threshold.

It may be argued that it is not fair to compare a mayoralty campaign to the election this year. True, but on the other hand there was no real issue last year. It was only a question of personalities. This year there was a genuine and important issue, no less than whether or not there was to be decent administration of city affairs. The women should have been peculiarly interested.

It is true the total vote was a commendable expression of the issue of the people of Chicago for decency, but the women are to be entitled to no more praise than the men.

If the women wish to make good return on their trust they must pay the price of eternal vigilance.

Cycling Society Hobby.

Somewhere about 1900 society took to the bicycle and a tremendous following came hurrying after. To ride a bicycle was the thing to do. It became a universal fad. But, sad to relate, its popularity was cyclonic. Manufacturers who thought they saw fabulous profits in cycle manufacture found themselves bankrupt with the turning point in woman's affections for electric and gasoline cars.

From Palm Beach we learn that bicycle riding is the latest society hobby. Last Sunday on the Lake Shore drive the appearance of several smartly dressed young matrons on wheels gives rise to the suspicion that the bicycle revival will not be confined to the balmy south.

Which brings us to ask the question: Will the bicycle ever regain its former place?

Manufacturers, having learned in heavy money loss the lesson of woman's fickleness, may hesitate to launch a strenuous cycle campaign. The dangers attendant on the increased automobile traffic of today may deter many city women from adopting the fad.

The bicycle deserves to come into popular favor. No other form of locomotion can compare with it. The honest enjoyments of the blessed air and sunshine which it affords, coupled with the fun and the health giving exhilaration it provides, are arguments sufficient for its right to live and be popular again.

The automobile is the lazy woman's vehicle. It provides no health giving exercise. In this day and age, when every woman's first duty to herself is to keep free from excess avoirdupois and where physical fitness is a demand she has to meet on a nearly 100 per cent basis, the bicycle might well be looked upon as a missionery with a creed to be adopted.

For those of us who have to stand on the curbstone and let the stream of cars go by the return of the bicycle means something more than just getting in the parade. It means health giving exercise to carry us through our busy working days.

Another reason why I think the time is ripe for the cycle revival is the present day status of short skirts and high boots, as worn by women generally, and which does away with the old time argument that a change of dress was absolutely necessary after a spin.

Children and Loaded Revolvers.

A startling number of young lives are wiped out yearly as a sacrifice to gross carelessness on the part of parents who leave loaded revolvers within the easy reach of small children. A Chicago boy of 12, left with his young sister to take care of the house while their parents went visiting, is the most recent victim.

Knowing a small boy's love of toy firearms and his inborn curiosity regarding their mechanism, it is easy to understand his desire to "try out" the revolver left lying carelessly in the bureau drawer.

Poisons are labeled and put high out of the reach of children. Even greater caution should be observed with regard to loaded revolvers. In the hands of the young they invariably prove fatal. Possible emergency may be the excuse for this too frequent carelessness on the part of parents. But it is pretty poor consolation in the face of a promising, sturdy, healthy young life suddenly cut off.

Shirred Coats Are Smart This Season

DRAWN FROM EXCLUSIVE CLOTILDE DESIGNS by MAUDE MARTIN EVERS

1278—A gathered blouse in one of the newest and prettiest models. It may be had in sizes 34 to 42. It is suitable for all varieties of light materials and as an adjunct to the spring suit is indispensable.

1279—A new model of a tunic skirt for spring and summer wear. Comes in sizes 24 to 32 and is especially adapted for wear with the accompanying coat model. A separate silk skirt is to be an almost indispensable factor of the season's wardrobe.

1280—A shirred coat in sizes 34 to 42. It may be worn as a suit coat with the accompanying skirt or may be worn as a separate coat with separate skirts and dresses.

THE spring and summer materials are charming and the shops these days are filled to overflowing with them. There is no difficulty in securing but only in choosing, especially as every one is anxious to effect a "different air" and infuse some of their own personality into the garment.

If one desires a suit or a blouse or a separate skirt of any of the summer materials the choice is wide, indeed. There are the silks first and foremost, delightful taffetas and pongees and foulards. Then, too, there is a new sports silk which looks like jersey for all the world, and yet washes and is guaranteed not to stretch. The mercerized Ottoman cords are extremely smart and, of course, whipcord, gabardine, and checked skirtings are to be much worn in the colors. Basket weaves and Palm Beach cloth are excellent for tailored costumes.

There is nothing prettier than organdy for the purpose it serves in blouse wear. Not only in white but in all colors it comes, and handkerchief linen, batiste, organdy, and lawn are also practical materials.

Printed linens are also to be used for the summer frocks, and dresses made of white linen and trimmed with checked and striped ginghams are also fashionable.

I might say here that skirts are to be longer this coming summer. Not radically or startlingly so, but dropping below the extreme height to which they have risen these last twelve months.

The First Call.

IN making or returning first calls more ceremony and formality is required than in subsequent calls. If you are married and are calling on a married woman leave one of your husband's cards. If she has one or more daughters out in society leave your card and your husband's on each of these members of the family. For later calls such a shower of cards is not required unless the family on whom you call has returned after a long absence.

A first call should be promptly returned—and promptly means within a week or ten days—when a similarly comprehensive deluge of cards should be left at the door. If you have daughters who are "out" they should go with you. You cannot properly leave their cards on an older woman. First calls should be comparatively brief, not more than fifteen or twenty minutes long at the most.

Calling as a formal function is going out of fashion in most American cities except the national capital, Washington, where it continues to be the principal business of life. In other cities it is falling into disuse, but first calls and dinner and luncheon calls are still required of the punctilious, well bred woman.

ALINE: If you want a simple home wedding, with just a few friends, and desire to avoid trouble and expense for your parents, have an afternoon wedding at, say, about 4 o'clock, and after the ceremony serve a simple afternoon tea. If you want you could have a pretty wedding cake adorn the center of the table. Serve tea, coffee, sandwiches, and cakes. Probably friends will send flowers, which can be tastefully arranged about the rooms. It would be quite proper for you to be married in a simple, dainty traveling suit, hat and all. You do not need bridesmaids or ushers for such a quiet, unostentatious wedding.

C. H.: The bridegroom does not have to send carriages or automobiles for the bridesmaids. The bride's parents tend to that. The bridegroom only has to see that the clergyman is conveyed to and from the place of the wedding and get himself and possibly his best man there, though that is not obligatory.

Set an Early Date.

The river was rippling silver in the moonlight. We were drifting in awkward silence down the stream in a frail canoe, each too much occupied in plans of how to win the other to notice a rowboat suddenly pushed out into the current. The crash came and upset us into the waist deep water.

The rower, mistaking me for his wife, for whom he had started in search, exclaimed, "My wife!"

The shock and water in my ears caused me to mistake the voice, and as my friend clasped me in his arms at that instant, I answered: "Not yet, but soon, dear."

Not until long after our marriage did he tell me of my error and how I had practically proposed to him. S. W.

Won on His Looks.

Jack was asked to be best man at his cousin's wedding. He told me shortly afterwards and when I looked at his fine, strong features and athletic physique I could not repress the exclamation, "O, I should love to see you in full dress."

"Well," said he, "you shall, for I shall leave as soon after supper as I can."

The eventful day arrived, and at about 10:30 p. m. Jack arrived. Far be it from me to be intentionally influenced by clothes, but when I beheld Jack just looking for all the world as though he had stepped from a tailor's catalog, I certainly fell in love with him. He told me all about the wedding etc., but I kept my eyes riveted on him. There was a strange new light in his eyes that I had not noticed before, but this I attributed to excitement, and then, too, a wedding is an affair that makes every one's eyes sparkle.

Finally he arose to leave. "Well," said he, "do I come up to specifications?"

"I can truthfully say that you far surpass them," was my answer. "In fact," I continued, "you look so stunning that I will let you be best man at my own wedding."

His eyes fairly danced. "My opportunity," he exclaimed, then took both my hands in his and said: "No, dear, not best man, say that I may be the best man" [emphasis on the "the"].

Then, after I had said that all important three lettered word he told me the old, old story, and just one year from the day on which he acted as his cousin's best man he was mine and has been ever since. J. S. K.

From the Foot of the Alps.

SOME time ago I left Illinois for a long, long trip to north Italy, the town I was born in. And there I met the girl that made my heart precipitate. At the moment I laid my eyes upon her, I made my permanence in Italy much longer than I intended, and at the same time I set all the world aside for her. My time was limited to a month, but I forgot that I was to be present at the factory within a month, so naturally I lost my position.

The day of grievance swept across all, as I heard that the war had begun. Then I realized that it was time for me to leave, but I found out that my financial standing was not sufficient to cover the expenses of the trip for both of us. Yes, I say both of us, as that dear girl was to become my wife. We made the decision to separate which made a very sad day. I was to go back to the U. S. to work and she was to wait for me until I could afford to send the pass ticket.

Finally the day of our separation came which was a torture to both of us. The day I arrived at Chicago I searched for work to make money, so I could buy Pauline the ticket, and everything necessary for a married couple. I succeeded in getting work and within a month, Pouline wrote me a letter inquiring if I made enough to buy the ticket, as she could not stay any longer without me. The second page was stained with tears almost illegible, but I succeeded in reading it such as "Dear John: My brother was killed at the front, and I have no relatives to stay with." Signed Pauline.

I cannot stop to write the rest of the letter but I left the room like a madman. I looked for my best friend William, and told him my sad story. I borrowed $150 from him, and in a few hours I carried an heavy envelope to the postoffice, got it insured, and mailed it to Pauline with the money. I was a happy man until I received the return envelope with the word upon it in red ink, "Moved to unknown address."

Nine long months of torture passed, and my boss remarked one day that I was neglecting my work and at the same time he knew how much I was suffering, but still he had to lay me off. I tried to get work in several different places, so as to forget that vision at the foot of the Alps in Italy, but in vain. After roaming around for some time I got work in a little town near Chicago, and always made a trip on Sunday with my friend who had an automobile to the city, to see some of our countrymen that worked in the city.

We came by an Italian restaurant, and my friend said he would like to stop off and get dinner, as he never had spaghetty dinner for some time. We got off and went in. I noticed a waitress who was perfectly built and wore a white dress. I couldn't see her face as she was facing the kitchen. My friend called, and the girl came toward us. I picked up the SUNDAY TRIBUNE that was lying on the table and while glancing over it a very loud yell was heard, followed by a noisy crash of dishes falling to the floor. "Jack!" some one screamed, "how came you here?" I dropped THE TRIBUNE and looked at the girl; it was Pauline standing right before me.

What happened next you can imagine, the proprietor lost one of his waitresses. It took some time for her to recover from the excitement, and finally she explained why she left Italy so suddenly. Her brother was killed at the front, and she had no relatives to stay with. Upon hearing this I realized why she did not receive the money.

A week later I was reading THE TRIBUNE in my own home, with my dear wife by my side, and my old friend William had made his home with us. J. M.

Perennial Phlox.

YESTERDAY I spoke about the border of hardy plants. In this and a few of the articles following it, I want to tell you about some of the best of the hardy plants for the amateur to cultivate.

At the head of the list I would place the perennial phlox. This for several reasons: It is ironclad in its hardiness. I have never known a plant of it to be killed in winter. It does well in all soils and all locations. And it is a wonderfully profuse bloomer.

Its range of colors is so wide that all tastes can be suited. From the purest white it runs through many shades of crimson, rose, and red, to lilac, mauve, cherry, and vermilion, and in between are many varieties in which two or more of these colors are combined in such a manner as to produce an exceedingly striking effect. There will be rose colored kinds with a white eye, white kinds with a dark eye, and others in which it is hard to tell which color predominates, so evenly is the variegation distributed.

The flowers, which average the size of a silver dollar, are borne in large panicles at the extremity of the stalk, and as a strong plant will send up from a dozen to twenty or more stalks it is easy to imagine the brilliant effect of a good sized collection of this plant. There will be an almost solid mass of bloom, and this will last for six weeks or two months.

Some varieties are late, some early bloomers. Some are tall growers, others of medium height, and many varieties are so dwarf as to be out of place in any location except the front row.

In order to obtain a harmonious effect, so far as height is concerned, be sure to consult the catalogue of the grower from whom you obtain your plants. If you give the tall kinds a place in the rear, with those of medium height in the middle, and the dwarf sorts in the front row, you will have a bank of foliage and blossoms that will give a most magnificent effect.

Care must be taken to keep the lilacs and mauves and magentas away from the reds and pinks if you want color harmony in the garden. Planted together the result will be absolutely painful to any one who has a keen eye for color effect. Mauves and magentas are delicate and exquisite in coloring, but they are powerful enough to dominate the varieties of stronger coloring which one would naturally suppose they would be subordinate to.

The only way to effect a compromise between the two sections, if they are to be used together, is to have as many white flowered plants as there are colored ones. If this is done the quarrel between them will not be quite so noticeable, but it will be there all the same, and I would advise a separation of the discordant elements.

Give the mauves and magentas a place by themselves, along with several white varieties, and you will have to admit that they are equally as beautiful, if not more so, than those of richer coloring. Whatever colors you decide on, be sure to use with enough white varieties to afford the contrast which seems necessary to bring out their brilliance most effectively.

Answers to Queries.

Mrs. G. G.—If you want asparagus plumosus nanus plants for table decoration, I would advise you to purchase them this spring, and grow them during the summer. Small plants purchased at the opening of the season will have become good sized ones by the end of it.

I would advise you to invest in at least half a dozen, so that it will not be necessary to depend on one plant. This asparagus is quite as desirable for window use as for the table, because of its ornamental qualities, and when your plants are not doing duty on the table they can be making the window attractive.

Use a soil of sandy loam. Keep the soil moderately moist at all times, but never wet. Spray often, to prevent the red spider from injuring them. If any branches seem inclined to lengthen out into vines, nip off the ends.

Mrs. R. C. K.: 1. Your tulips can be left in the ground, or they can be taken up, dried off and replanted in September. It is not necessary to buy fresh bulbs each year. As a general thing, the bulbs should be taken up once in three years and the old ones replaced with new ones. 2. What is meant by "plant in the open ground" is, plant directly in the garden where the plants you set out or sow are expected to bloom. 3. The plant "resembling a daisy," of which you wish information, is doubtless pyrethrum uliginosum—a perennial blooming in August. Perfectly hardy and a fine plant for the border.

Mrs. F. A. H.: Your English ivy would doubtless do well if planted outdoors during the summer, but it would have to be brought indoors in the fall and transplanting it would so affect it that it would be all winter in recovering from the setback caused by interfering with its roots. Better keep in the pot, but put it out of doors on porch or veranda during the summer. Set it on the grass of the lawn when a shower comes up and let it have a good washing.

* *

Mrs. C. J. E.: Peonies like a rich soil and they object most decidedly to having their roots disturbed. A rather heavy soil suits them better than a light sandy one. If heavily manured each season and not interfered with this plant improves with age and after a few years becomes a clump four and five feet across, with hundreds of blossoms. It is one of our best hardy plants.

* *

H. J. S.: If you will go to a seedsman in your city and ask for it he will gladly give you a catalogue in which you will find explicit directions for the making and care of a hotbed and cold frame. Space in this department is too limited to give full directions here.

* *

D. C. M.: If your ferns seem to be doing only fairly well, apply fine bonemeal. Work a tablespoonful of it into the soil about the root of each plant. It is possible they are getting root bound, as you say you have three plants in the same box. Better repot in spring, giving each plant a pot of its own.

GAILY COLORED SMOCKS MAY BE WORN FOR COATS

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

BY JEAN SEIVWRIGHT.

Drawings by H. E. Shepard.

(Copyright: 1916: By The Chicago Tribune and the New York Globe.)

THE pursuit of outdoor sports affords infinite pleasure to the woman of today, and Fashion, eagerly watching the trend of thought and action, finds in this another opportunity to demonstrate her power. While rough homespuns, untrimmed save for their leather buttons, formerly satisfied the needs of the golferf and walker, fashion has made a decided change in the attire of the sportswoman. Gayly colored clothe in many novel weaves now vie with the speckled homespuns woven in the scattered isles of the Hebrides or the wide stretches of Donegal. Indeed, the new sports clothes are designed not alone for the woman who is an enthusiast in her particular pastime but also for those who elect to watch their sisters at play.

Some are destined for wear in the solitude of the country where the secrets of horticulture are slowly revealed, others for the country club or fashionable watering place. Several attractive originations are depicted in the illustration. A quaintly fashioned smock will doubtless Suit of green Cumberland tweed trimmed with plaid; yellow suede collar and cuffs. Hat of yellow suede with facing of blue silk and band of green silk.

Smock of tan linen with green smocking; skirt of green and tan linen. Leghorn hat with velvet flowers appliqued in wool.

Skirt of white linen with navy blue hairline; sports skirt of fine white linen. Hat of white straw trimmed with cola spotted navy silk.

Coat of purple silk with white collar and cuffs; hat of purple jersey.

catch the eye of the woman who delights in gardening and knows she must protect herself against the daring assaults of thorny stemmed roses and trailing vines. A new idea is revealed in this model, for it may be slipped on like a coat—an innovation that will surely meet with approval. Smocking done in bright green silk adds color to this simply fashioned model, which is laced up the front with a black silk cord that matches the arrowheads at the pocket.

The skirt is developed from a broad striped linen, green and tan being effectively combined. Cut on simple but practical lines, this skirt is enriched with two large pockets—valuable adjuncts for the busy craftswoman. The novel hat that completes this interesting outfit is faced with black and tan, while the leghorn crown is elaborated with brilliantly colored velvet flowers appliqued with green wool.

To the left a decidedly smart golf suit is illustrated. This is fashioned from a lovely Cumberland tweed—light in weight but warm enough to protect its wearer from the biting winds of early spring. The color chosen is a vivid green that harmonizes well with the budding trees and distant fields of winter wheat. A touch of contrast is revealed in the yellow suede collar and cuffs that reflect the yellow streak in the plaid trimming that lends a novel note to the costume.

The hat of yellow suede is stitched with green and swathed around the crown is a band of green silk caught with a blue buckle that catches the color of the underbrim facing.

A charming coat that is well suited to the various needs of the out of doors girl is pictured at the right. This is developed in a rich purple silk jersey, for such fabrics are too well liked to be overlooked when outing clothes are being selected. The softly folded collar that drapes the shoulders and extends far beyond the ordinary limits of these accessories is slipped around the waist and left free, or it may be carelessly knotted to suit the changing fancy of the wearer. This is developed in an oyster white jersey, although touches of the purple appear in the handsome tassels that finish the scarf and are also used to ornament the cuffs.

A trim skirt of white linen bound with a narrow strap of purple silk and a prettily shaped hat of purple silk add much to the beauty of this interesting sports dress.

To the right of this is an admirable costume for tennis, which also will be approved by the girl who enjoys walking with a long, swinging stride. The skirt is made of rough linen whose uneven texture is modified by a navy hairline that gives it a faint touch of color. The front is distinguished by rather broad knife plaits that narrow toward the waistline, while the side panels, in one with the smartly cut girdle, are adorned with outward flaring pockets that may on occasion be tightly buttoned up.

The sports shirt is also developed from linen, but of a much finer and softer weave. A panel that broadens as it reaches the waistline gives a pleasing effect to the waist. The sleeves, cut with generous armholes, are cuffed in dashing mode, while the collar, too, is modeled on similar lines. A navy tie with big white coin spots emphasizes the simplicity of this outing dress.

The broad trimmed hat of white straw is faced and banded with the blue and white silk.

He'd Had More Experience.

Fred and Charlie and I decided one Sunday afternoon that it was about time that we commenced "keeping company," and so we promised each other that we would try to get permission to escort three of the most attractive girls of our town home from the church service that evening.

Now these three girls concerning whom we plotted always accompanied each other home, and had never allowed any male interference. So we drew lots and Fred drew first chance, Charlie second, and I last.

When the meeting was concluded that night the girls came out of the door together and we were out on the porch under the bright electric light.

Fred stepped up to one of the girls and said, "May I see you home?" and the young woman replied, "No, thank you; I have company," and she marched on.

By this time a considerable crowd had gathered on each side of the walk, with the apparent purpose of watching our movements.

Charlie stepped up next and said to the second victim, "May I see you home?" and received the same sinister answer: "No, thank you; I have company."

It seemed to me that by this time the whole village had gathered outside the church to witness my discomfiture. And there was the third girl, the girl of all others whom I worshiped, and I resolved in my heart not to go down to defeat. So I said to her, "May I see you home?" "No," came the reply, "I have company." "You bet your life you have company," said I, "and you're going to have company to your doorstep!" And I took her by the arm, determined to see her home at any cost. Not much force was necessary, though, for she was as willing as I.

Between the rows of spectators we walked, and beyond them we came upon the other two girls. And since Fred and Charlie had slunk away like two whipped curs, I had all three on my hands.

I don't mean to boast of greater moral courage than Fred or Charlie, but I had had more experience at canvassing books than they. Well, they are moping, grouchy, dyspeptic bachelors by this time, while I am a happy married man. And that's how I got my mate. J. B.

Fancied Her Chickens.

In the town to which my mother and I moved some ten years ago I had few acquaintances. I became much interested in a man, but seemed unable to find any one who knew us both well enough to give us an introduction, so I must lay my own plans. He was a poultry fancier and raised some nice chickens, more for pleasure than for profit, and the only way I could see was for me to start raising fancy poultry. It was not long before my fancy stock caught his attention, and I found after getting acquainted that the liking was mutual. He is still proud of my ability as a poultry raiser and even admits I can do it better than he. C. B.

This Does More Than Remove Hair

The razor, pastes, rub-on preparations and liquid imitations of De Miracle act in the same manner. They merely remove hair from the surface of the skin. De Miracle, the original liquid depilatory, is the only logical and scientific way to remove hair. It alone contains certain ingredients which are antagonistic to hair and which are quickly absorbed. Therefore it attacks hair under the skin as well as on the skin. Well groomed women always use De Miracle for removing hair from the limbs to prevent it from showing through stockings. Also for removing hair from under arms. Avoid disappointment; buy De Miracle by name and you will get the only depilatory that has a binding guarantee in each package which entitles you to your money if it fails. In $1.00 and $2.00 bottles. If your dealer will not supply you buy a bottle at The Public Drug Co., Buck & Rayner's six stores, or direct, postpaid, in plain wrapper. De Miracle Chemical Co., Dept. Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are

Forceful.

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped and addressed envelope.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

IT would seem that you Aries folks were blessed, indeed, from the natural leanings you have toward letters and learning. And besides these talents you can be a success in the legal profession or as a financier, a salesman, a machinist, or a designer. Small wonder that I call you lucky!

Your motto, "Lo, a troop cometh," fitly expresses your impetuous and well-nigh unconquerable energy. And the meaning is "armed and prepared," indicating the insight and reasoning powers you possess in such abundance. Your direct frankness would be almost brutal if it were not for the generosity and intuition that form so large a part of your nature. The natural activity of your brain inclines you to be restless, but if you are given congenial employment, in which you can combine some mechanical work along with your mental labors, you can accomplish wonders.

You can, if occasion demands, be exceedingly critical and overbearing, and you may make enemies on account of your forcefulness. Nothing delights you more than to get into a heated argument, and you usually have good reasons for your deductions. Fiery and forceful as you are by nature, you have a strong vein of tenderness not always suspected. Your intuition makes you understand without detailed explanations the troubles of others, so that you are able to readily help the sufferers. You stick by any one who has done you a kindness, through thick and thin, even if no one else has a good word for him. As your insight into character is naturally so keen, this is undoubtedly a willful blindness growing out of a generous desire to have your friends appear as perfect as you would like to have them.

You are fond of fun and a capital companion for a picnic. The fact that you are a good scholar, along with your genial, witty manner, makes you a favorite wherever you go. You are always sure of a host of friends whether you are a man or a woman; people don't seem to mind the little streak of vanity that runs through your nature. This shows itself at times in acts of inordinate selfishness, of which you are totally unconscious, and in a propensity to talk about yourself.

Such a general favorite would naturally be fond of society and not averse to entertaining lavishly. But as you grow older you must learn to take life easier, for you are apt to expend more energy than you can generate; a little rest along the way in earlier years will bring a happier eventide to your life.

You much prefer to direct operations; the details annoy you. You see how a thing looks at the start, but you want some one else to do the work, though you are willing to assume all the responsibility. But you stick to whatever you undertake; you calculate closely, and count all cost before starting, but once begun, there will be a finish.

At times you have strong leanings toward the spiritual, a feeling that increases with age. But you will never forget material needs while searching after spiritual food. You may be a regular churchgoer, but wherever you attend you will have your own ideas about religion. Your deep insight makes it possible for you to see the outcome of things that look doubtful to the unsophisticated. So it is that some of those "steady" church people think you are far too advanced in your ideas. You like to have your good deeds known and are not one of those people who "give in silence."

Business worries or inharmonious domestic relations drive you to distraction, and if continued may result in severe illness. Your love nature is so intense that you must be careful in the selection of your life mate. And if it is to be a happy union you should seek not only your social but your mental equal.

It is better far for you to be rejected than to choose one not worthy of your love. Your union with a Sagittarius person, provided your nationality and social position are about the same, will likely prove a happy one. Marriage with those in your own sign will be a fortunate union if the two heads do not try to lead at once. Libra, your opposite, Sept. 24-Oct. 23, will prove a congenial mate.

Your two most fortunate weeks for beginning new enterprises are those beginning April 13 and Nov. 29. Your colors are blue, pink, and white; birthstones, diamond and amethyst.

Anent Exchanging Jewelry.

"Dear Miss Blake: Do you think it is proper for a boy to let a girl friend take his club pin if she asks for it? Should he ask for her club pin, her ring, or something? DOUBTFUL."

This exchange of jewelry among boys and girls in their 'teens, I know, is a popular custom, but, nevertheless, it is to be criticised. A girl should never ask for a boy's pin, and if I were he I certainly would not give it under these conditions, let alone ask her for any of her precious belongings.

"Why Swear, Dear? Use 'Gets-It' for Corns"

It's the New Plan. Simple. Sure as Fate. Applied in a Few Seconds.

"Why, John, I never knew you to use such language! I've told you several times it's no use to try those bandages, salves, tapes, plasters, and contraptions

"You Wouldn't Lose Your Temper, John, If You Used 'Gets-It' for Those Corns!"

for corns. Here's some 'Gets-It.' It's just wonderful how easy, 'clear and clean' it makes any corn come right off. Takes but a few seconds to apply. It dries at once. Put your sock on right over it—there's nothing to stick or roll up, form a bundle of your toe, or press on the corn. It's painless, simple as rolling off a log. Now put away those knives, razors and scissors, use 'Gets-It' and you'll have a sweeter disposition and no more corns and callouses."

CHICAGO WOMEN THINK. They keep posted. They make their husbands leave THE TRIBUNE at home every morning so they CAN keep posted. And their husbands get other Tribunes at the corner stand.

Before and After Marriage.

"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on marriage disillusions. Address Doris Blake, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." Write on only one side of the paper.

Some Set While It Lasted.

I always had admired pretty teeth, so quite naturally one of the first things I noticed about Harry when we first began keeping company was his fine white teeth.

We went together for a whole year and then were married. We had been married exactly two months and four days. It was Sunday and we were eating nuts, when crack! one of my husband's teeth broke off close to the gum.

Before I could voice my horror and astonishment my husband drew his whole upper set of teeth from his mouth, and meeting my petrified gaze, said calmly: "Girlie, that was some set, wasn't it? It was worth the price I paid, since it fooled you."

So you see you don't know how much you have to know to know how little you know. S. J. H. G.

Taffy for the Old Boy.

My husband and I have always kept young, and I am sure it is due to our love of all kinds of sports, especially dancing. We danced before we were married, and now we have been married thirty years and are still dancing, and in all that time I have never had to "tease" my husband to go to a dance.

But now that these new dances have come along my husband "pulls back," and makes fun of them, saying they are only fit for children.

I was at a loss to know what to do, as we were members of a dancing club. I could not get him to go as usual. He would get up all sorts of excuses to remain at home.

After practicing a little at home with our children and myself, he learned the steps and finally tried them at the club. A few days after I said, "John, do you know you look much better than the rest of the men when you fox trot, because you dance so straight and bend a little to one side? You look stunning! I love to look at you dance."

Well, that settled that dance. I have no more trouble getting him to go to dances—he goes early and stays late, and dances them all. In fact, he is a little "dippy" on the new dances.

So you see it pays to "taffy up" our husbands, no matter how old, and you will find the women are not the only ones that "take to flattery." C. L. Z.

My Clothes Tricks.

Sticks to Large Hats.

I have a large round face and used to persist in wearing small, close fitting hats and turbans. I never knew how I looked until a friend of mine suggested I try a sailor hat with a wide brim for a change. The change was so much for the better I decided not to wear any more small shapes. I now stick to large hats with wide brims and my friends remark about my improved appearance. R. C.

Had a Cool Friend.

I was three years younger than my elder, yet every one took me for the eldest, and I was not looking forward with much pleasure to the party, when a friend of mine said to me, "My dear, let me make your own," and laughingly I consented.

First, instead of putting my hair all around my large face as I always did, she combed it quite close to my head and high on top, and pinned my face looked much smaller. Well, I was a little encouraged. Next my face was well massaged and the tiniest bit of rouge and powder was used to relieve my sallow complexion. O, what a difference! Then instead of my figured organdie party dress with its ruffles and fullness a plain blue dress to match my eyes was chosen, with a bunch of black velvet ribbon.

Dear me, what a change I saw when I looked at myself! I then saw it wasn't just myself, as fat and dowdy looking, but the clothes that I wore. No more figured prints with ruffles and fullness and no more puffed up hair to make my face look like the moon, for I had more compliments and the best time at that party I ever had in my life, and many thanks to my friend who made suggestions. A. B.

Lighting the Way to Economy

A few months ago we held a sale of lamps that was the talk of all Chicago. A dealer in lamps, who was present, stared in amazement at the values presented. "How can you do it?" he asked. "Why, you are selling these lamps at prices lower than I can buy them." This is just such another sale—if possible, a greater one. In this event you may select from the handsomest and newest designs in fine lamps and save just about one-half of the regular prices. If you have any lamp needs, this is your opportunity; don't fail to serve it promptly—tomorrow. It means tremendous savings for you.

Hundreds of Thousands of Answers to Ads in The Sunday Tribune

Last Sunday The Chicago Tribune printed 425.70 columns of advertising.

Of this, 204.29 columns were classified or "want" ads—less than half the total.

In these 204.29 columns were 9,599 separate ads.

Of these 9,599 ads, 2,354 carried Tribune box numbers.

In response to these 2,354 ads there were received at The Tribune office on Monday and Tuesday alone 41,900 letters.

Yet these 41,900 letters were received in response to less than one-fourth of the classified ads, which were in turn less than one-half of the total advertising.

Since it is far easier to respond to an advertisement by phone or by calling at a well known store than by writing a letter to an unknown person, it is certain that the responses to the advertising in last Sunday's Tribune amounted to hundreds of thousands, involving the expenditure of millions of dollars.

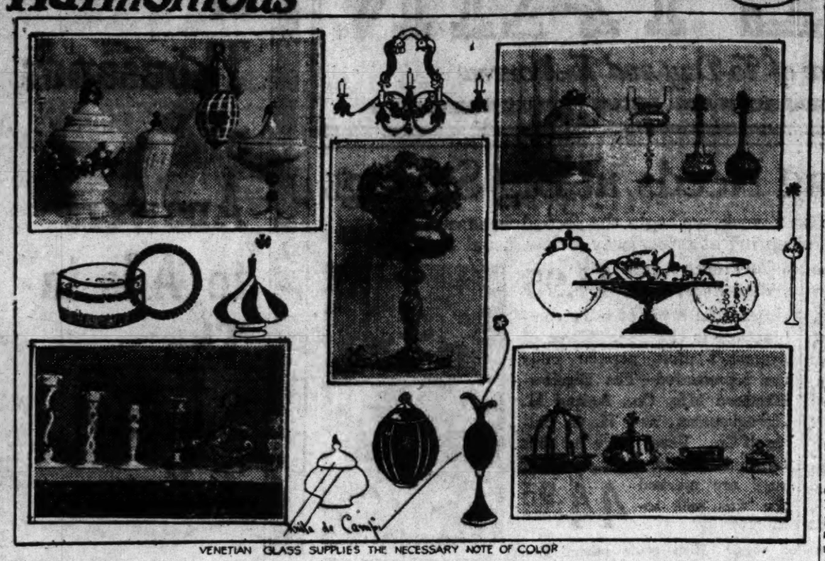
The Home Harmonious

Venetian Glass to Brighten Neutral Backgrounds

Anita de Campi



VENETIAN GLASS SUPPLIES THE NECESSARY NOTE OF COLOR

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

WITH neutral color as an accepted factor for backgrounds in home decoration, attention naturally turns to the relief of vivid touches of color so necessary to save the whole scheme from being utterly dull. The small, concentrated note comes like a virile flash to give life to what would otherwise be deadly.

Women who set about adorning their homes with intelligent understanding know that primary colors even in small objects must not be scattered about the place with an indiscriminately lavish hand. That a small object in the room be of a bright primary hue is not enough. The article itself must be beautiful as well, and not only that but it must be placed at some focal point of interest.

Wonderful in its adaptability to this phase of interest is the new display of Venetian glass. Some of the most transparent colors seem to have caught the soul of the flame in their firing and to hold it gleaming in their veins.

The extraordinary thing about this exquisite glassware is that it is equally beautiful whether carried out in transparent or in opaque colorings. The range of effects is almost unlimited. The same applies, by the way, to the range of prices. However, when a fad attains the success that this one has price never stands in the way. It has completely taken the place in the public fancy that has been held for years by cut glass. Cut glass of the deep cut geometrical design has had its day. With all other things that were too ornate it has been censored.

Unquestionably in good taste, however, from the beginning and forever more are certain other types of cut glass—the plain colonial piece cut in flat, prism-like effect, the exquisite baccarat, the tall stoppered wine bottles, and simple forms whose beauty is their own translucent charm.

Glasses and decanters should, according to the best authorities, depend upon their content of wine or other liquid for their color, so that the best glasses are the clear ones, and whatever ornament is used on them should preferably be placed toward the upper rim.

The best models of Venetian glass are those that are made as ornaments purely and not as parts of table service—vases, lamps, flower bowls, jugs, baskets, candlesticks, etc. The various objects shown in the accompanying illustration need the supplement of accurate description to do them any justice, in lieu of their being printed in color.

The covered urn in the right hand group is of milky glass festooned with flowers and fruit in turquoise. These come singly, one to be placed at the center of the sideboard with a formal flanking of candlesticks. Or it may be a pair, one on either side of a punch bowl. The simplicity of the display makes it emphatic—and it is palpable that the object so embasized must be worthy of admiration.

The next is an opalescent covered jar trimmed with deep blue.

Delicately beautiful is the little hanging basket of black lattice with milk lines and colored flowers designed to be used as a flower holder for the living room.

The covered compote is of opalescent blue with a brilliantly colored bird on its top. It is intended for a sideboard ornament.

In the center picture is the most astonishingly lovely decorative piece. It is an electric light eighteen inches high of topas colored glass. The bowl on a stand is seemingly filled with fruit and flowers of glass in many colors. It is really a marvel of the glass worker's art. These lamps come singly or in pairs and are designed as table decorations. They are expensive, but novel and wrought with unusual skill.

In the lower left hand plate are several Venetian candlesticks. The first is made of a black and a white twist of glass. The second is of milk white glass trimmed with black. The third is of antique milk and black. The fourth one is in a ravishing shade of opaque coral with white trimmings. The other two are of transparent glass, one rose sprinkled with gold, and the other crystal and blue. These things are not much more expensive than the heavy cut glass that they have superseded and they carry with them a note of present day favor.

In the left hand upper corner is a compote of opalescent white dotted with green tears and having for a knob a little bunch of opaque pink flowers. Next to it is an urn shaped vase of unusually graceful form. It comes in rose and yellow sprinkled with gold. The two bottles designed for the dressing table are striking. The first one is an amethyst bottle trimmed with a wreath of yellow flowers and green leaves. The other is black glass with a vividly colored stopper of brilliant fruit. They are both to hold toilet water.

In the right hand group the first piece is a table decoration that is dainty and unique in design with its little glass arches touched with gold colored flowers; the rest of the glass is inamethyst. The colored box beside it of opalescent gold wreathed with opaque white flowers and transparent green leaves is a bonbon box. The finger bowl and plate are black with a flower and fruit on one side. The smallest piece is a powder box of solid looking turoquoise finished at the top with a white flower and green leaves.

The rage for color manifests itself also in the other brilliant pressed glass. Forms of fruit to be found in it are pears, red apples, lemons, oranges, bananas, plums and grapes, all daringly colored. They are not expensive, and piled up as they are on huge shallow black glass bowls they make rather remarkable splashes of decorative color.

All black vases, jars, and covered boxes were never more in vogue. They are made more eccentric looking by having placed in them one or two black artificial flowers highly glazed into a sort of porcelain finish.

Unique and faddish, too, is the use of sprays of drooping branches of black artificial leaves and stems thrust into alabaster bowls and urns with or without lighting attachments.

Dresden china also asserts itself, claiming a place in delicate color schemes in the form of gracefully framed wall mirrors finished with spreading branched candlesticks. The one sketched here has pale turquoise blue fleur de lis beneath the candles and the frame is of turquoise trimmed with little pink roses.

A new note has been struck this season by the good use of colored enamel paint applied in decorative pattern on such simple things as variously shaped aquariums. The decorative little gold fish as a color touch is not to be despised. The enamel paint is applied to the outside of the aquarium itself, not burnt in, of course, yet it resembles burnt enamel fairly well and is bright and cheerful looking, particularly for solarium use. In the globular shaped aquarium at the right the color scheme is worked out with little marbles in different shades of jade green. Some of these have holes drilled in them through which a tiny stick of split bamboo is run, holding them up like ascending bubbles.

The connoisseur naturally appreciates the artistic value of the genuine Venetian glass, its limpid clarity and singularly translucent texture, in which the light lingers, loath to pass. He realizes the skill required in its making and notes how inimical all sorts of pressed glasses, requiring little skill in molding, are to it.

Answers to Inquiries.

G. G.: Cover your scrim to curtain rods, one at the top and the other at the bottom of the glass, both of your doors, and on your windows in the sun parlor. Let your roller shades be of glazed chintz. These are decorative on the outside and within. You will need eight rollers. Buy the thin curtaining by the yard. You can, if you wish, order your chintz roller curtains made to measure.

D. P.: You have sent me a stamped, self-addressed envelope, but, having failed to inclose your letter, I wonder what it is you want to know. Will hold the envelope and expect to hear from you.

L. M. C.: Yes, overdraperies are permissible on windows. Let your triple casement windows be as one, allowing the same valance to extend across the three. Use a dull green on your dining room wall. Let it be quite plain. Choose a library table of mahogany to go with the other things you have. Let your curtains and draperies be the color of the side wall and let your rug be of a color contrasting with these or darker.

The Tribune Cook Book

by Jane Eddington

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

PEOPLE in general know so little about fish and I know so little compared to the vast world of information there is on the subject, that I find it hard to write about this food. I have been putting off the task for four weeks now, feeling but partially ready to do anything as the time came around when words must be put to paper. In the meantime I have had many kinds of fish in the house, recipes for the cooking of which are not commonly found in print anywhere, the flounder, cod's tongue and cheeks, shrimp, cured fish of various sorts, etc.

When we are able to get fish as they swim, as they do in Berlin and other cities of Germany, from tanks in fish stores, we shall eat more fish the year around and the week through than we do now, instead of crowding our consumption of fish mainly into the Lenten season.

One of the things the girls in the cooking schools of Germany learn is how to slay a fish—I have seen them doing it. Then, if this fish is to be subject to fine cookery, one of good size is often larded. If it is to be cooked "au blue," they prepare and scald it with hot vinegar and set it in a draft. Fish for this treatment needs to come into the kitchen alive. Fish should also be fresh from the water, if it is to be used for any of the famous fish stews, because then it has more gelatin, which is what makes the eel stew of the world so unctuously partaken of.

If you do not believe people would crowd around a tank of swimming fish watch how they stop and study the windows of our few real fish markets. These windows have as constant and a bigger crowd of curious people in front of them for much of the day as the dog and monkey window up the street. Such collections as blue point and cotuit oysters, bass, pike, pickerel, fresh and salt mackerel, smoked white fish, different priced bloaters, smoked eels, and smoked haddock, without a single swimming frog, will hold the attention, and when crabs from California and a deep sea turtle or one of the new tile fish—all giants—are added, the interest becomes almost exciting.

There is perhaps more of novelty from week to week in such a window than in that displaying any other food. Don't miss the show.

Fish under skillful hands offers inexhaustible resources of gustatory enjoyment. I would advise anybody who wanted to learn to cook fish to take Escoffier's "Guide to Modern Cookery," and study those pages on fish, consisting of all between page 260 and through page 351, and all the pages elsewhere in the book on fish stock and sauces.

By the time you are through your mouth will have watered many times for fish, and you will have learned something about the infinite number of ways of cooking this food for the gourmet, which you would perhaps like to be, and about the wonders of garnishing, and you will have received invaluable suggestions about the cooking of vegetables to be served with fish. Mind you, study those pages, not merely read. I expect to study them over and over whenever I have time to cook fish. Remember, a gourmet is not a gourmand.

Fish is now coming to us from almost every coast line, outer and inner, of the continent. Shad arrived from North Carolina about March 20, selling at the handsome price of $2.50. The next week it was seling at $1.75, and hailed from Baltimore.

Shrimp is now sold uncooked, and served hot in various ways. It is also boiled in the shell in the usual way and served in the hot sauces, tomato, curry, etc. It is a famous garnish. One market man tells me that he now sells more on Saturday alone than he used to sell in a whole week. He is also getting 200 pounds of tile fish a week and it finds ready sale. The government has done this much, in less than six months, with its bulletin and the other publicity it has given this new fish.

To cook fish in delicious sauces is an art almost unknown among us. Most of these sauces contain some fish "fumet" or fish stock, with seasonings that make them delicious. Other fish besides salt mackerel may be cooked in milk, and, better yet, half cream. The finer the grain and the whiter the fish the more delicious and the better the dish, but even a slice of halibut is good.

The method is ancient, possibly as old as the Phoenicians, who invented the alphabet. The most delicious dish of the sort I ever had was named for them, and I had it in Marseilles, France, where it would seem every beauty and every monster of the deep is cooked with supreme skill. It was a rolled fillet of some kind of white meated fish. The method of cooking is called poaching, and the sauce should be thickened.

In buying a slice of halibut the other day the market man cut off a whole pound from the thin side, and threw it into the waste. I said I would have taken that for stock, so he rescued it. I remarked that the napes [neck] were good for chowder. He said, "Of the finest, but I can't do anything with them around here, although I would sell them at 5 cents a pound and have them every week."

We waste a great deal of fish, and it is wicked, since all that is necessary to make a stock of fish bones and remnants is to—well, is to study the matter of making fish stocks, because it requires study to make them delicately and well. Any left over fish keeps better in a little stock, although no fish keeps well for long.

Poached Halibut.

One slice of halibut an inch or a little less thick, one-half cup of fish stock, one-half cup of cream, one tablespoon of butter, one tablespoon of flour, one or two carrots, one tablespoon of chopped shallot or onion, or more if to taste, a little salt, paprika, and lemon.

Poach over the fire or bake in the oven. It is much less expensive to cook it in a frying pan over the fire—that is, to poach it. It must not boil, or the sauce will be cooked away too much and the fish spoiled. Melt butter and cook onion in it gently for five minutes without browning.

Stir in flour; add fish stock, and cream cold, and stir constantly to the boiling point. Set off the fire and add the red part of carrot, cut into thin long shreds. Other vegetables, like diced peppers, may be added. Put in fish, and baste with sauce every minute or two, keeping close watch that it does not boil.

If the fire is as low as possible the fish may be covered for five minutes at a time and then basted and covered again. Lift from the frying pan once or twice to let the sauce under. It will not stick on if cooked right. Cook till tender, or about twenty-five minutes, take up on platter, and baste the sauce over it so that strings of the carrot will be scattered prettily over the fish, set under broiler rather close to the fire until brown, but not black, blisters appear on the sauce and brown spots on the fish.

Sprinkle a little paprika here and there if you choose, and serve at once with quarters of lemon, dipping sauce over each individual portion. A white sauce, or merely thickened milk, may be used instead of the stock and cream, which is finest, seasoned to taste. If baked in oven, about thirty minutes will be required, with frequent basting.

The thin fillets of some small and white fish, rolled around a bar of carrot and cooked in such a sauce may be served most ornamentally.

Simple Fish Stock.

Allow one pound of fish trimmings to each quart of water, one or two medium onions, some celery, parsley, etc. A little lemon juice is often used and wine often. Before the water is added the whole is jerked around over the fire and the essence of the fish extracted. The water is added cold, brought to a boil, the whole skimmed, then boiled from twenty to thirty minutes, and strained. It is thus one of the quickest stocks made, and may be used for many soups and sauces.

Sliced potatoes, onions, and a thickening may be cooked in some of this stock, with the final addition of butter and milk or cream for a quick little chowder.

Boiled Halibut in Chafing Dish.

Quite an ideal way to boil a slice of halibut for timbales, etc., is in the chafing dish. Bring enough water to cover fish to the boiling point in water pan, seasoning it with a slice or two of green pepper, some green celery leaves, a little salt, and other seasonings to your mind. The liquid remaining may be used like any fish stock. If the halibut when tender is broken up and bound with white of egg and cracker crumbs, and steamed in little molds in the chafing dish, the cooking liquid may be used in a cheese sauce with which these timbales are served.

Fried Perch.

Do not throw perch into the water and let them soak. It deprives them of flavor and they are less wholesome. To clean, cut off two ventral fins and rent. Scissors may be used to cut off fins. Hold by the tail and scrape, then cut off the head and tail, and holding the fish under water as short a time as possible, scrape out with a pointed knife the dark lining on each side of the backbone. If a half inch slice is taken off the back the whole length of the fish the dorsal fins will come with it and it will be easy to split the fish from the backbone in two fillets after it is fried. Wash quickly and wipe dry—the wiping dry is important—before it is dipped, whether in egg and cornmeal or milk and flour. If to be fried in deep fat it is well to break the backbone or it will curl. A favorite common method is to roll them in cornmeal and fry in pork fat.

Baked Salt Mackerel.

There is perhaps no way of preparing salt mackerel quite equal to that of baking it in rich milk, or, better, cream or a half cream mixture. Wash off salt, cut off head and fins, scrape off any black skin or other refuse. You should know what the color of the best salt mackerel is. It is hard to describe. Wash in several waters and soak cut side down from twelve to as many hours as you think necessary to soften fibers. Take out of water, rinse and wipe dry before baking or broiling.

To bake remove the spinal bones and put in tin plate or baking pan of the right size, skin side down, and cover with rich milk or cream. It could be poached, but is usually baked. Bake until a brown crust forms on the milk, which will probably be in about twenty-five minutes, with a moderately hot fire.

Quickly prepared mackerel is soaked but a short time, partly cooked in milk, which is poured off and finished in hot cream. The milk softens the flesh much more than water.

CROSS, FEVERISH CHILD IS BILIOUS OR CONSTIPATED

Look, Mother! See if tongue is coated, breath hot or stomach sour.

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver, bowels.

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs," that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When the little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for a 50 cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here, so don't be fooled. Get the genuine, made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

Have You Met a Nervy Flirt?

Who was the nerviest flirt you ever met? What did he say? And what did you say? Was the incident funny or otherwise? "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Write on one side of page only. No manuscripts returned. Address Nervy Flirt Editor, "The Chicago Sunday Tribune."

The Pin Impinged.

One summer afternoon a girl friend and I were out rowing on the lake. Two young men in a boat near ours tried to flirt with us, but we paid no attention to them. Later in the evening as we were sitting on a bench in the park these same young men walked over and sat down by us. It was growing chilly, and I turned up my coat collar, intending to pin it about my throat. Just as I placed a large pin in my mouth the young man nearest me reached over and tried to kiss me, not noticing the pin.

You can imagine his surprise as he drew back with a cry of pain. Holding his handkerchief to his bleeding lips, he walked away, telling me in angry words what he thought about it. My friend and I only laughed and told him it served him right for being so nervy. A. B.

Those Romantic Italians.

As the song from Pinafore goes, "Ah, many years ago when I was young and charming" I went abroad in regular American girl style sans a chaperon. I thought that my sensible, tailored suit and flat heeled unromantic shoes were sufficient protection from any foreign flirt who might spy me.

On my second day in Rome I was striding along feeling happy and content. I suddenly felt my arm held in a firm grip, and turned to look into as handsome a pair of dark Italian eyes as I have ever seen. The owner of the eyes beamed at me in a most friendly manner and began to talk. As I could not speak a word of Italian, I was at a loss what to do. I tried to pull my arm loose. I even reached for a hat pin, but nothing daunted him. fashion, and my frantic efforts to rid We walked for nearly two blocks in this myself of my unwelcome escort were giving great amusement to the street gamins along the way.

Then one of those brilliant flashes which do come to the aid of the desperate came into my mind. I turned to my beaming friend and fairly shrieked, "United States!"

The last that I saw of him was a flying figure going down a side street. M. A.

CALOX

The Oxygen Tooth Powder

"Practice what you preach"

THIS young lady was early taught to use Calox, the Oxygen tooth powder, and in due time will doubtless make a good mother.

Many tooth powders and pastes are excellent in their first effect, but used regularly prove too strong for the sensitive tissues of the mouth, producing soreness of the gums and sometimes worse.

Calox releases that great purifying force in nature - oxygen—when brought in contact with moisture. A test of Calox efficiency—try it on your child's teeth for a week—note the way it removes the stains and leaves them glossy white.

By the way, are your own teeth white? Try Calox—a generous sample may be had on request from your Druggist or from McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton St., New York

On Washington's birthday the children in Martin's school gave an entertainment. An afternoon dress rehearsal preceded the evening performance. On returning from the rehearsal I was amazed to hear my 3 year old daughter say: "Well, mother, I looked the prettiest and nicest of all."

"Why, Marion," I replied, "who told you so?"

"No one; but I looked at all the other children and then I looked at myself."

My little niece was having lunch at my house one day when she dropped one of my best dishes on the floor and broke a piece out of it.

Junior's grandmother, who lived with him, was quite old and talked a great deal of being old, so little Junior, as well as the other children in the family, felt that no one was ever quite so old as their grandmother.

One day at dinner Junior said, "Grandma, did you ever see Adam?"

Grandmother, a bit startled, replied "No, dear."

"Then did you ever see his little boys?" persisted Junior.

"No," said Grandmother, "nor his little boys."

"Well, then, did you ever see Noah?"

Grandmother was forced to admit that she never had.

"Huh!" said Junior; "I don't think that you are so very old after all."

To make: Take white silk and tear off three or four strips an inch wide and a yard long. With these folded in half, wind all the wires on the frame. Wind tightly, covering all wires completely, paying particular attention to juncture of corners. Allow no ravelings to show.

When all wires are wound take the white china silk and cut off a piece large enough to cover space indicated by letters A B C D.

Stretch tight and pin carefully all around, then sew with small stitches; trim edges closely.

Repeat the same on area D X" A" B" Y" C. Always stretch as nearly straight up and down as possible. Area A B C D is also lined. Always be sure to pull taut and trim closely. Lastly area marked G L X A B Y.

To make sunbursts and sunsets divide ribbon into four stripe, two of them each forty-two inches long and the other two thirty inches each. Thread needle with extra strong thread and gather one of the strips thirty inches in length, bringing the gathers to a center as in in a rosette. Hold the center of the rosette to the center O; do not pin, just hold it there and fasten the ribbon at points marked A B C D. Then pin the gathers all around on the wire of that area, making the plaits as fine as possible. Sew and pull all the plaits evenly, trim the edges close to the gathers and the wire. This process is called a sunburst.

Repeat on surface marked A B C D. Then cut the rest of the ribbon into two lengths, gather as before, securing center of rosette at point marked Y. Pin all around along wires G L X A B Y, never forgetting to make the plaits as tiny as possible. Sew this, too, with small stitches. Trim the edges close to wires.

Repeat the same for area D X A B Y C. Make small braid rosette to hide center of sunbursts.

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING-HAND

by MARION HARLAND

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

"I HAVE thought maybe the Helping Hand readers might have some old magazines with good reading they would send me. I don't care how old the magazines are. I am not able to subscribe for any and I am at home all the while, and lonely.

"V. C."

Who will comply with the request and send reading matter to brighten this lonely life? Please inclose stamp for reply when writing for V. C.'s address.

Names of Boys and Girls.

"Can you please advise me through your Corner where I can get a complete list of the names of both boys and girls?

"E. M. R."

I do not know if there is such a list in print anywhere, but the nearest approach to it will be found in the back of a good unabridged dictionary, where the names of men and women and the meanings of those names are given.

* *

Music Records Wanted.

"I would be thankful if records for a graphophone could be sent to a school for mountaineers. It would be of great help and pleasure. M. S."

I know something of the school for which this appeal is made and will be happy to supply the name to any one who can give records. I can heartily indorse the excellence of the institution, and I hope the wish of M. S. for it may be granted.

Deaf Ask Aid.

"I notice your kind offer of an ear tube for the deaf. I have a friend who is badly in need of just such a tube, and as she is in poor circumstances it would be greatly appreciated by her. G. P."

"I have read the offer of Mary R. of an ear phone and I will gladly pay the charges upon it and would like to know more about it. C. L."

I am sorry to report to both these applicants that the ear tube and phone have been given away. I print their requests in the hope that some one else may be able to satisfy their needs I will keep the addresses and furnish them on application, if accompanied by a stamp.

An Invalid Who Keeps Busy.

"I have an electric belt that is almost new which I would give to some one who needs it, and I would like to have some silk pieces and some magazines. I have been an invalid sixteen years, and would be glad to get letters. I would like much to hear from Mary B., as I have some glasses that might fit her. I would so much like to get an old third or fourth reader, such as was used thirty or forty years ago, and in exchange for it I would crochet some lace. Mrs. S. C. C."

The writer of this letter will be sure to have more than one request for the electric belt she offers. I trust the response may be as plentiful to her appeal for silk pieces and magazines, as well as for the reader she desires. The request of Mary B. for glasses has been answered, but some one else is likely to want them. Please inclose stamp when writing for this address.

Would Aid a Blind Woman.

"Will you ask some kind reader to send me a formula for making the colored rose beads or floral beads? I mean the ones made from some dough or paste. I know they contain orris root powder and cornstarch, and some sort of glue to hold them together, etc. I ask this recipe that I may send it to a blind cousin who needs some such work to help her to purchase the comforts of life. She could make such beads and sell them in her city, as all would be glad to help her. She is not able to buy the formula, and neither am I, but I would gladly give in exchange for it a recipe for a hand lotion that will keep the hands soft and white. I will send with this a recipe for a good, safe face powder to any one presenting me with a food formula for the beads. M. A. E. D."

Some months ago we gave so many recipes for these rose beads that I do not feel justified in sparing the space for repeating the formulas. I am sure, however, that there are readers who would be glad to make the exchange requested by the correspondent and I will gladly supply her address to any one writing for it and inclosing a stamp. I am sure the chance to do a good turn to a woman seeking to earn money by making the beads will appeal to the Cornerites quite as much as the opportunity to secure the recipes offered.

Make a Lonely Woman Happy.

Can some one supply this correspondent's needs?

Crocheting Rag Rugs.

"Will you kindly send me instructions for crocheting rag rugs? N. A. H."

Fortunately there reached me instructions for these rugs by almost the same mail that brought the request. I give the letter below:

"I wish to pass on a new old pastime work that some shut-in may enjoy. I am not a shut-in, but I found it pleasant. It is crocheting rag rugs. I cut woolen rags about half an inch wide, cotton a little wider, and sew them together. I then use a large hook such as is employed for heavy wool. I did not have one, but my husband made me one from an old toothbrush, cutting off the bristles. Use a single crochet and in crocheting on to the preceding row catch into one thread only, the back one. That leaves a sort of a corded effect upon the right side, which adds to the appearance of the rug. Such rugs are prettiest if made in stripes, but they can be done in any way. Two pretty stripes I made were of dark brown. I had quantities of it, and I mixed short pieces of pink with one and of yellow with another. When it was worked up they looked like flower petals. I had a number of worn tennis flannel night dresses, and I mixed them with dark colors, such as red, blue, or black, about half and half. These, with plain stripes, make it pretty. They look best on polished floors but are nice anywhere. I made two round and one oblong. You can make them of any size, but the large ones take a good bit of material. G. B."

Others besides Mrs. N. A. H. will be grateful for these instructions. I have seen such rugs, and they are extremely pretty.

Velvet Coat for Little Girl.

"I have been an interested reader of the Corner for some time and feel I would love to share some of the happiness it is bringing to others. It seems to me there is a vast amount of good for so little space. I have a black velvet coat in good condition that would fit a girl 3 years old. I have also a suggestion for the busy mother. In making piecrust flake your flour, lard, salt, and baking powder together and put it into a stone or glass fruit jar. This will keep indefinitely and you can take out each time you wish it the amount needed and moisten it according to the quantity required. You will find the flour keeps the lard sweet even in hot weather if the jar is set in a reasonably cold place, and it saves much time. I. A. L."

Thank you for the pleasant things you say about the Corner. The offer you make of the coat will soon be accepted. The other offers have been glady accepted, and the housewifely suggestion also is welcome.

Wants Piano Lessons.

"I wish to ask if any one would be willing to give me a few lessons on the piano. I would be grateful for them. Also please send me the address of L. B., who lives on a ranch. I would like to send her letters, postals, etc. E. H. L."

The address of this correspondent will be given to any one who thinks it possible to put her in the way of securing the music lessons she desires. I hope she will be able to make her offer of letters, postcards, etc., to some one else, since L. B. is already supplied with all the correspondence she can manage.

Making a Silk Quilt.

"Will some of the members of the Helping Hand kindly pass on to me old numbers of fancy work magazines? Also I would appreciate silk scraps and make what return I could for them. I am a partial shut-in, and to pass part of the time and to start a new interest I want to make a silk patchwork quilt for my couch, which is my best companion at times. I will repay all postage, and will be very glad of the new acquaintances. My life is so full of sunshine that I have plenty to spare. Mrs. Zae."

I am sure there are some fancy work magazines that can be sent to this correspondent, and the silk scraps will also be forthcoming, I am positive. When a shut-in writes that she has sunshine and to spare in her life she is a correspondent worth having and one who will give as much as she gets, or more. I wish to thank her personally for her kind words to me and her good wishes.

Shoe for Luncheon.

I was working for a large shoe factory, and it was my custom to lay my lunch on the same bench where all the shoes lay.

One afternoon I happened to be reading an interesting piece in the paper, and without lifting my eyes from the paper I reached for another sandwich, but grabbed a shoe instead and tried to take a bite of it. Imagine my embarrassment when everybody laughed at me. H. S.

Caught in Mail Box.

I have always been anxious to know how much my gas bill was every month. Once the boy delivering them put mine into my neighbor's mail box., I spied it and put my left hand in to get it out, but my wedding ring prevented my hand from moving an inch. There I stood, a prisoner until an apple peddler passing by came and released me, minus my ring, which was lost in the mail box. Imagine my embarrassment when I had to go to the owner of the mail box for my ring. Mrs. C. O. W.

Didn't Expect Eggs.

A couple of days ago I went to an amateur affair at our club. I had been seated in a box seat with a few other friends, when about the middle of the performance a young man appeared on the stage doing some awfully silly stunts.

This actor deserved to get the hook, I thought. But I was greatly surprised by seeing eggs flying through the air. As I turned around I was struck in the face by an egg.

You can imagine my embarrassment at being in such a conspicuous place, for the egg leaked all over the front of my dress.

He Must Have Suffered.

I was keeping company with a nice young lady one summer. I was calling on her a couple of times a week when I decided to stop going so often because I had no desire to get married so young.

About this time I went to a dance one night and met a young lady who lived next door to this other girl. I made an engagement to call on her. When the night arrived I came down the street, and as I came within a few feet of my destination my old girl and her brother came out of their gate, and when she saw me she naturally thought I was coming to call on her. She came running up to me and said, "Why didn't you telephone me you were coming over tonight? I might have been away from home."

The other young lady was sitting on her porch and heard everything. You can imagine how I felt when I had to tell where I was going. G. E. C.

She Was Bowlegged.

While coming home from a show with my girl friend we happened to get in front of a bunch of fellows who immediately started up a flirtation with us to which we did not respond, giving them I suppose the impression we were bashful.

Finally one fellow said, "O, you in green (which was me), you're some cute kid, believe me. Eh, fellows?" To which one answered, "You bet. But did you ever see a cutie that wasn't bashful?"

Now I'm a trifle bowlegged and still in short skirts, so I'm terribly sensitive about the matter, and so when I heard him call me "cutie" I thought he was referring to my legs, for cutie means bowlegged. I turned, to the surprise of all and to my chagrin later, and yelled, "If you don't like my legs don't look at them!"

Ageing, wrinkled skins

How to keep them young

As soon as you let your skin grow lax and sluggish, the tiny wrinkles, and then the bigger ones, will come.

But you can keep your skin so firm, so active that it will defy wrinkles and will retain its clear, smooth youthfulness. To do this, make the following Woodbury treatment a daily habit.

Bathe your face and neck with plenty of Woodbury's Facial Soap and hot water. If your skin has been badly neglected, rub a generous lather thoroughly into the pores using an upward and outward motion, until the skin feels somewhat sensitive. After this, rinse well in warm, then in cold water—the colder the better. Whenever possible, rub your skin for a few minutes with a lump of ice, and dry carefully.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of a skin specialist. This treatment with it cleanses the pores, then closes them and brings the blood to the surface. Use it regularly and it will keep your skin so firm, so healthy and active that it will resist wrinkles and retain that fresh, clear youthful look you want it to have.

Do this today! A 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment. Go to your druggist or toilet counter today and get a cake. Begin at once to get the benefits of this treatment for your skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is for sale by every dealer and druggist in Chicago, and, in fact, by dealers everywhere throughout the United States and Canada. Made by the Andrew Jergens Co., New York & Cincinnati.

The Working Girl's Meals.

FOR the last week or two many working girls have written letters to the newspapers scoring those clubwomen who have been agitating themselves over the working girls' meals. They have been incited to take up the cudgels at the assertion of Mrs. L. Brackett Bishop that any working girl can get along on an appropriation of 33 cents a day for her meals.

There is no class of women so well able to take care of themselves as working women, and they invariably resent the society or club woman interesting in their affairs. Nearly all the reforms that have been brought about in working conditions, increase in wages, and concessions gained as to comforts and privileges are due to the unaided efforts of the working woman herself. No one knows better than she how wholesome, nourishing food and a sufficient quantity of it becomes an asset to her in that it furnishes her with enough energy to carry her through her working day.

If these society and club women would use their influence as individuals, where they can, with their employer husbands and fathers for as high a minimum wage as possible instead of furnishing them with excuses for keeping girls' wages on a low scale they would spare themselves much ridicule and keep their motives free from the suspicion that it was the publicity for themselves rather than the benefit to the working girl which incited them to the experiment.

Below is a letter from a girl worker which voices pretty accurately the sentiment of working women in general:

"As a working girl I would like to ask a question of the group of Political Equality league women who enjoyed such a sumptuous repast at the large sum of 8, 9, and 13 cents. It is evident these women have not worked for any number of years, and are not using up energy to the extent of the ordinary working girl.

"I've never seen a working girl who could thrive on the suggested meals of the clubwomen, who are so capable of telling those less fortunate than themselves how they can live on $3 a week.

"Of course, I can appreciate that after having 5 cents worth of corned beef and cabbage and 2 cents worth of tea Mrs. L. Brackett Bishop cared for no dessert, nor could she possibly eat bread and butter with such a filling first course.

"This same class of clubwomen can tell mothers how to raise their children, though they have none of their own, and are also the ones who can tell their sisters who are not so fortunate financially how they can keep the love of their husbands, though nine out of ten don't know what a husband's love is. They are too busy investigating the conditions of the poor working girl, and who can say that they help the cause?

"The wife of a man who employs a number of girls can find a way for the girl to live on $5 a week. Why pay her more money with corned beef and cabbage and tea at such a low premium? What would be the cost of regulating the digestive organs after having had a nutritious diet of this kind for 365 days?"

Varied Activities of Women.

Mrs. Harriet Reynolds has a goose ranch in California from which she earns $2,500 a year.

Mme. Patti, who recently celebrated her seventy-third birthday, attributes her good health to the fact that since she was 40 she has lived on a strict diet. Since that time she has eaten no red meat and drunk only white wine and soda.

Mrs. Ceany Jones of Grady county, Georgia, who has just celebrated her one hundred and sixth birthday, says she can remember running away from the Indians with her parents in 1814.

Chinese students at Oberlin college shortly will stage a play written by Miss Yuet Ha Tang, a native of Hongkong.

Mrs. Mary Parsons of Portland, Ore., who now is past 87 years of age, is known throughout the west as an expert in tree grafting. She also holds the state prize for fine embroidery and lace.

WAR MAP OF VERDUN
In Colors!

The Tribune next Sunday will print a war map of Verdun in colors. It will be made under the direction of Capt. Henry J. Reilly, The Tribune's military expert, who spent nine months with the allies in France.

The battle of Verdun may possibly be ended before the map is printed. The battle is the greatest in the history of warfare. Many believe its conclusion may bring on the end of the war. Whatever the result, it will not impair the value of the map, for details of this struggle will long be sought and long remembered.

In a recent article in The Tribune Capt. Reilly showed the advance of the Germans to have been a steady gain, day by day, inch by inch, since the offensive began on Feb. 21. The gain was made at an enormous sacrifice of men, but it was a progressive advance, according to Reilly, despite the claim of the French that the Teutons had made no significant progress.

The war map of Verdun in colors will give in detail the various moves and counter moves made by the attackers and the attacked. It will indicate the valleys crossed under a stream of fire and the hills stormed at the price of wholesale death. All important strategic points will be designated, including rivers, forts, redoubts and the shifting lines of trenches, entanglements and other forms of fortification and resistance.

The battle of Verdun has already cost an untold number of men. It may prove only an incident. And it may end the war. In either case the map will prove invaluable, for it will help you to gain a comprehensive and intelligent knowledge of the most bitterly fought episode in this horrible conflict. The map will be found in the color section of Chicago Women Lead in Getting Things Done.

By Mme. X.

NEW YORK smart society women may be "up and coming," as country folk say. They may head the procession of eastern cities in their advanced ideas on charity, reform, art, litezature, drama, music, and social matters, but they are not in it with Chicago women for energy, ability, enterprise, and amazing, all round achievement.

After a week in Gotham of fairly comprehensive and industrious rounding up of the leaders of the various forms of activity there—a roundup that included several fashionable affairs at the Colony and Cosmopolitan clubs, a visit to the Red Cross shop in Fifth avenue, inquiries as to the activities of the suffrage workers, a glance at studio life, queries as to women's part in local charities, a performance of the Washington Square players at the Bandbox theater, and also sidelights on the continued popularity of dancing in the various fashionable public or semi-public places devoted to terpsichore, one might expect a certain sense of let down on returning to Chicago's less varied and numerically inferior community.

Instead, the brain whirls and breath fails at impact with Chicago's beau monde at this moment in history. Never has it seemed in such a fervid, white hot heat of philanthropy, politics, and social doings.

Absorbing Fad of the Moment.

The French doll and toy shop, the White Elephant rummage sale, the French wounded shop, the reports from the Bandbox shop, the announcement of the sale next Tuesday at Mrs. James Thorne's for the benefit of the Woman's exchange, all go to show that keeping shop and becoming saleswomen is the absorbing fad of the moment for Chicago society dames and damsels.

In addition to these enterprises the returned Chicagoan is dizzied by the discussions of the experiences of Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank and her cohorts at the polls last Tuesday, and by the plans the Chicago suffragists are getting under way for the parade next June.

Bewildered by these, one turns in another direction and finds the Casino still whirling merrily, with a big dinner on Thursday, followed by a real novelty—a fencing match between a Swedish woman, Miss Karin Broberg, and an American, Capt. Aubrey Churchill.

Still further to swell the list of social preoccupations are the many dinners and receptions to be given this coming week in honor of Herbert Ward, who is here to speak on the work of the American clearing house at Paris.

He is to speak on Thursday evening at Mrs. R. T. Crane's and on Friday evening at Mrs. Chauncey Blair's, both times describing his personal experiences as an ambulance driver. Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick and Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Crane are among those who are dining Mr. Ward during his stay. Owing to illness in the Lathrop family, Mr. Ward will not be the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bryan Lathrop as announced, but will be at the Blackstone.

Preparations for the Junior league entertainment also absorb the younger element, and Mrs. William J. Chalmers is busy pushing the patriotic song festival in May for the home for convalescent crippled children.

Isn't this, an admittedly incomplete list of undertakings, enough to overwhelm the returned native and make New York seem a very haven of rest? Comparisons between the two cities and their way of doing things are inevitable, and in this comparison Chicago acquits itself well.

Toy Shop a Success.

In New York the sale of the French dolls and toys, made principally by disabled soldiers, took place in the rooms of the old Knickerbocker club and continued for weeks. It was before Christmas and netted a large sum. The time of year was more propitious for such an undertaking than that which has fallen to Mrs. John Carpenter's lot here. But she and her assistants have done extraordinarily well considering the many drains on Chicago purses just now.

The old Perry Smith house on the corner of Lincoln parkway and Huron street has taken on a new lease of life—a temporary one, to be sure—after more than a quarter of a century of rather humiliating experience for a mansion that was in its brief day one of the most conspicuous in Chicago.

The black floors, green benches, and white walls which have been evolved under Mrs. Carpenter's supervision are a chic setting for that delightful assemblage of dolls, otys, and games. The one time conservatory has been converted by a row of pots of gay colored paper tulips and by a group of big red and white umbrellas into a festive tea room, and every afternoon various groups of women have served tea there to customers.

It is a sluggish or impoverished imagination that can look at the quaintly carved and painted animals, peasants, soldiers, smirking cavaliers, and smiling ladies, all with an utterly Gallic touch to them, without a poignant sense of the tragedy behind it all. For many years to come these dolls and toys will be the emblem of the imperishable quality of courage and patriotism.

Crowds at White Elephant.

What an amazing sight that rummage sale in North Wabash avenue has been this last few days! The dense throngs who strove to get to it reached across the sidewalk. The hindmost men and women were often jostled into the street. It taxed the tact and skill of a half a dozen policemen to care for the crowds inside and out who came to buy of the superfluity of the well to do which was offered by the women on the board of the Children's Memorial hospital to raise money for this beautiful charity.

This sale had its prototype in a similar affair in New York early last winter. On that occasion one day was devoted to selling the costumes of well known New York women, each garment being labeled with the name of its former owner, so that the buyers had the exquisite satisfaction of knowing that they were wearing a gown of Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt's, or a cloak of Mrs. August Belmont's, or a suit of Mrs. Philip Lydig's. Such information greatly enhanced the value of the article.

The Chicago women have indulged in no such enterprise of questionable taste, but they have far outdistanced their New York sisters in the amount raised by their sale. In the first place, they have been able to so arrange the undertaking as to have had no expense in getting it up except that of postage. The shop was given them. Their stationery and printing was donated them. All the aid in collecting, storing, sorting, and selling the goods was volunteered them. Even their daily luncheons in a nearby place were presented them by a coffee merchant who supplies them rye bread sandwiches, Gruyere cheese, and coffee and cream at noon each day.

The New York sale lasted six weeks and netted $15,000. The Chicago sale in its first two days netted over $10,000.

Among the women who work daily there are Mesdames Watson Blair, John Spoor, F. C. Letts, Howard Elting, Samuel Chase, Mark Cummings, George H. Taylor, William P. Martin, Josiah McRoberts, and Morse Ely. The social leaders proved to be able saleswomen. In order to promote the buying of silver and china they showed buyers how to set dinner tables and how to arrange art objects.

Mrs. John Spoor's silver department was one of the most profitable departments. Here the first day the crowd about the counter was three deep. A large part of the success of the whole enterprise was due to Mrs. J. T. Harahan's work at the head of the publicity department. Many an ad man might envy her her ability in this line.

Red Cross Work Compared.

To compare another Chicago philanthropo-commercial venture, the French wounded emergency shop at 60 East Washington street, with a somewhat similar undertaking, the Red Cross shop in New York on the corner of Fifth avenue and Thirty-seventh street, is still further to increase local pride.

A visit to the New York establishment showed a large, sunny, airy place with two long rows of tables filled with women making or rolling the many kinds of bandages now required in war hospitals. The tables at one side were under the direction of Mrs. Leonard Wood and all the work here done was put away for use in America. The tables on the other side were directed by Mrs. Bruce Clark (formerly of Chicago) and the bandages, etc., made at these tables were destined for the foreign war sufferers of all the different countries, though you could signify for which country you preferred to work.

They did not seem to have such a well organized sales department as that of our French wounded emergency shop nor are their shipments as large as those of the Chicago shop. They think they do well if they ship fifteen cases a week, while the Chicago women dispatched last week over sixty cases.

Work at the Polls.

The voteless New York women lack a certain excitement in life which a coterie of well known Chicago women find in political activities. Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank is usually to the fore in important political campaigns and she and a devoted band of north siders devoted themselves to aid in securing the election of that noncommittal, mysterious, unknown quantity, Earl Walker, as alderman for the Twenty-first ward.

Mrs. Fairbank and a dozen of her adherents manned some of the polls as challengers and watchers and by so doing enlarged considerably their experiences in life. At the polling place at Ontario and Dearborn streets Mrs. "Jack" Winterbotham, Miss Mary Waller, and Miss Cornelia Conger were an active trio. While Mrs. Winterbotham acted as challenger, the two others got a list of those women of the precinct who had not voted, and, taking Miss Waller's car, they went from door to door offering to convey each recreant voter to the polls. Where the women said they were too busy with their housework to go at the moment, Miss Waller and Miss Conger extracted promises that these delinquent citizenesses would go later and vote.

Miss Suzette Ryerson, a watcher at the polling place at Chicago avenue and North Clark street, was initiated into ward politics by some of the local leaders who respectfully debated with her as to the morality or lack or morality of "repeaters." Theoretically she won out on this topic, but it is not safe to hope that the evil will henceforth be stamped out in that locality.

She and Miss Conger, by the way, were the bright and shining lights in the public speaking class that met with Prof. Nelson at Mrs. F. C. Lott's in February and March.

Benefit for Woman's Exchange.

The sale of garden and sports hats and suits, tea gowns, negligés, lingerie, candle shades, and other novelties which will be held on Tuesday next at the residence of Mrs. James Ward Thorne, from 9 to 5, for the benefit of that excellent enterprise the Woman's Exchange, promises to be a smart and successful affair. The articles are made by the women who are provided by this association with a means of livelihood. Every article is copied after the latest Paris and New York models.

Among those who will be acting as saleswomen that day are the Mmes. Morris Johnston, Laurence Armour, Philip S. Doane, oJseph Cudahy, John Geary, Robrell, Hugh Johnston, Mark Cummings, and Miss Grace Dixon, president of the society.

The Bandbox shop, under the able administration of Mrs. Howard Linn and Mrs. Arthur Orr, is turning over $300 a month to the French war orphans, and as soon as the original capital invested in the shop is paid back they expect to send twice as much to the fatherless children of France. Recently at an exhibit of their dainty wares in Minneapolis under the auspices of Mrs. Roger Shepard (formerly Miss Kathleen Kohlsaat of Chicago) they secured several thousand dollars' worth of orders. There is no enterprise in New York to match this one.

Tickets at a Premium.

On the other hand the Washington Square players there should be a great inspiration to Mrs. Aldis and her band. The New Yorkers started in a modest way a year ago last winter in a small theater on Washington square, which playhouse they dubbed the Bandbox. They charged in those early days 50 cents a ticket. Today they have moved to a much more commodious quarters (keeping the name, however) on East Fifty-seventh street, and they now charge $2 a ticket, and so much in demand are tickets that a small band of Chicagoans recently paid $3 apiece for the pasteboards to admit them to the austere precincts of the Bandbox theater.

The troupe has become professional, each member of it devoting him or herself entirely to acting, drawing a salary and playing six nights and one matinee a week. This last season they have so far given six plays by foreigners and ten by Americans. Regular subscribers to the association pay the same price as outsiders for seats, but have first choice, and have the entrée to the many lectures given by the society.

All of which points a way for Mrs. Aldis and her players if they choose to renounce the world, the flesh, and the devil, and cleave only unto drama.

It must be admitted that the Washington Square players don't yet give you $2 worth of joy, but they are plainly headed that way.

Among Chicagoans sojourning temporarily in New York is Abram Poole, who has had a studio apartment there this last winter. He is now preparing for a spring exhibit in New York of his pictures in conjunction with two other friends, Scott Pyle and George Biddle. The three painters will bring this same exhibit to Chicago next autumn, by which time Mr. Poole's house and studio now building in Lake View avenue may be ready for occupancy.

Meanwhile these three have planned a delectable summer. They have taken Maeterlinck's lovely villa in southern France near Grasse, that region devoted to the making of perfumes. The air there is always redolent with the fragrance of flowers grown for this business, ideal surroundings for any one, but especially so for those with the artistic temperament.

Gardening Calls Amateur Farmers Back to the Land.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Even before the snow is gone from the ground enthusiastic amateur farmers are making their way to Long Island and Westchester places to plan the laying out of gardens and the construction of new buildings. At the Monday morning sewing bees they discuss when they shall plant this flower and that and argue on the important subject of how long it will take the rains of April to wash away the snow and ice of a winter.

It is much the thing nowadays to garden—even if digging in the earth does make the ends of the fingers stubby. Indeed, it is not regarded as being of prime importance in this twentieth century, as it was in Jane Austen's eighteenth, to have lonig, tapering fingers. It is the thing now to be destructive and sportsmanlike—to drive a car like a chauffeur, to give the gardener expert instruction in how to garden.

The fourth horticultural show, which opened on Wednesday, has, as a consequences, been very popular indeed. It opened promptly at 2 o'clock by the hands of the clock which pointed to the dahlia on its face. Whereas mere workaday clocks are provided with numbers for telling the hours, this horticultural clock was set with flowers: The water lily for 7, the dandelion for 5:30, the marigold for 9, the Star of Bethlehem for 11.

One hundred and fifty flower-like debutantes acted as waitresses. They turned over the profits of their labors to the fund for French wounded and the vacation war relief committee. The girls wore skirts of vertical stripes of red, white, and blue, designed by Miss Marjorie Curtis. The exhibition was one of the most picturesque and beautiful that has taken place this winter in New York.

Eleanor Nash a Bride.

Miss Eleanor Nash was a bride of the week. She married Culver McWilliams with a simple but singularly sweet wedding. It took place in Rye, N. Y., at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund A. Nash. The bride was gowned in white tulle and Brussels lace. She carried hyacinths. She had only one attendant, her sister, Mrs. Douglas Gorman of Baltimore.

The bride is a descendant of the Nashes for whom Nashville, Tenn., is named. She is the granddaughter of Sir Hugh Owen of Wales. She is an excellent golf and tennis player. Her husband is in the brokerage business in New York.

When Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Guinness return home from Europe the City of New York always expects something interesting. Mrs. Guinness, in the unrefined language of our day, is a "live wire," and if she does not bring something with her she starts something exciting immediately on her arrival.

Lady Colebrook Over for Rest.

I sat week Mr. and Mrs. Guinness returned, bringing with them none of the Astor family, but a friend of theirs, a noble woman, who is interesting New York. Her name is Lady Colebrook. She has been working in the munition factories of Great Britain, and in sheer exhaustion has come to the Guinness mansion to rest.

To Lady Colebrook this city home in a country with background is a welcome retreat. She worked for six months in the munition factory at a wage of approximately 58 cents a day. When she worked at night she got slightly more. Numbers of titled ladies enlisted for the work and kept at it for a time, but all dropped out from exhaustion long since.

Before her own initiation into this unexpected occupation Lady Colebrook had never even arranged her own hair. She had been brought up to spurn every kind of practical occupation.

First Class Workers.

"Some of the idlest of our leisure class of women have developed into first class workers and are making good wages," she said. "If you have war in America—which God forbid—your women must go into the munition factories. They can help there. The Young Men's Christian association built a plant near the factory and served us meals. At night when the Zeppelins came they huddled us in there, sometimes for hours at a time, in total darkness. There have been many more Zeppelin raids in England than the papers have chronicled."

Lady Colebrook is a beautiful woman, with lovely soft eyes and rounded cheeks. She has the beautiful English coloring, which work in a munition factory has not dulled.

Birthday Dinners Having a Vogue in Official Life.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special Correspondence.]—Birthday dinners seem to be having a remarkable vogue. No need to send any one in official life the cynical condoling little birthday card, "Cheer up, everybody has 'em." Everybody in this neck of the woods seems proud of having 'em, and everybody's friends proclaim them loudly and celebrate them.

Last Monday Secretary Daniels discovered that Secretary Wilson was having one and gave him a dinner, in honor of the occasion. And it was some dinner! The week before George Sanderson of Chicago called in a number of well known people to help him celebrate the fact that Senator Gallinger was 79 years old, and they had a perfectly lovely dinner with a great cake, ornamented with the arms of New Hampshire and seventy-nine tiny candles lighting it up.

The vice president and the speaker have both had birthday dinners within a few weeks. The vice president had scarcely waked up to the fact that it was his birthday when he got a note from the president assuring him that the chief executive was glad he had been born, and the management of his hotel sent him up a great cake iced to represent a telegram on which were inscribed the managers good wishes.

Mrs. Baker did not succeed in leasing a home in Washington, but she admitted having found several that would have done if she had not fallen in love with the historic old Blair place at Silver Spring. Just over the district line in Maryland. She wants it, and nothing else looks good to her. She wants it now, what's more, right away quick.

The Montgomery Blairs, who own it, and who like to spend the spring there, don't quite like the immediate possession idea. Unless the Blairs and the Bakers can compromise it will probably be up to the secretary to find that house.

Sayre Baby Surprises Washington.

Washington was rather startled to learn of the arrival of Miss Ellen Axson Sayre into this vale of tears. Few had any idea that she was expected, as the Sayres have not been in Washington for several months.

People are remembering Secretary Bryan's laughing comment when this young lady's brother arrived at the White House that he and the president were now seven times a grandfather, he having six grandchildren and the president one. It rather looks as if the former secretary of state's superiority in that line were forsaking him.

Also there is some interest in the fact that both of the president's little granddaughters are named for their grandmothers, Ellen Wilson McAdoo and Ellen Axson Sayre. It is noted moreover that taste in names is going back to first principles.

It has been frequently stated, and apparently not denied that Mrs. McAdoo was originally Ellen, rather than Eleanor. But as she grew up she preferred the stately, more romantic form, and signed herself Eleanor and began insisting on being called Eleanor, until by the time she came to Washington it was only a few of the disagreeably long memoried of her friends and relatives who remembered that she had been christened "just plain Ellen." But old fashioned names are now fashioned new, and "just plain Ellen" is plenty good enough for their mothers' babies.

May Be June Wedding.

The long expected announcement of the engagement of Dr. Grayson and Miss Gertrude Gordon was met with a sigh of relief, that at last the blow had fallen. Dr. Grayson has been the Butt—with a capital B, please—of this administration, taking in the president's household the same sort of position that Maj. Archie Butt had in that of Taft and Roosevelt, as the one of the aides who was most frequently the chosen companion of his chief, and who fell naturally into the place of official escort to the women of the household.

Almost inevitably he became the butt of the matchmakers as well. They were bent on getting him engaged, and gossip was continually linking his name with some one, preferably some one of the president's household or immediate entourage, even as they did Maj. Butt's—a most embarrassing situation for an officer and a gentleman.

Miss Gordon was one of Helen Taft's playmates, and it was while doing escort duty to President Taft's daughter that Dr. Grayson met and developed a decided penchant for the pretty Virginia heiress. Early in the Wilson régime the affair had reached a stage where his intimates were teasing him and tenderly inquiring as to the progress of his suit.

It is said that the president and Mrs. Wilson would like to make a White House wedding of it, but that the parties chiefly interested prefer less conspicuous surroundings. Though no date has been announced, Dr. Grayson is quoted as having told intimates that it would be late in May or the beginning of June, and it is understood that Miss Gordon's house in Sixteenth street, which has been rented this winter, will be occupied next season by its owner.

Everybody hopes that Dr. Grayson's marriage will not mean his elimination from the White House. As a rule when the aides marry they shortly cease to be aides. Except the chief aide—Col. Harts, at present—bachelors are preferred. But as Grayson is the president's physician, as well as one of his aides, that rule may not hold, for there is no precedent which demands that the president's personal physician shall be unmarried.

APRIL

In Touch With Spring

WHEN the robin wakes the day and the wood frog sings it to sleep; when white maples bloom and shad bush buds swell; when the chickadee takes the phœbe's notes, and when the ruby crowned kinglet joins the chorus; when warm rains fall and bold green shows from under covert, hut happiness demands a spade.

It remains as an instinct in folk to earn their subsistence directly. Life has so complicated its scheme that this which was the toilsome duty is now the romance. But the instinct remains to turn the earth over and plant something in it.

When the thaws release the odors of the earth and charge the air with their sweetness, man, having a patch of ground, must dig in it and turn it over. He must reduce himself imaginatively to primitive terms and conditions and demand his sustenance directly of the soil. This is the romance of his life—to set up the fiction that he is a cooperator in the scheme of production, and by his work fill his granaries.

The red maples bloom, hepaticas blossom, and the tang of sap is in the air; nights are odorous, and midges and moths fly in through the unscreened windows. Field sparrows and tree swallows come, and the hermit thrush is among the fallen leaves.

Folk join the awakened processes by taking the spade to the patch of ground. It is the human's share in the turn of the wheel; without the spade he is merely a looker on; with it he is, as he asks to be, an active agent in its scheme. Man wishes to be intimate, not alien to these processes. With the spade he makes himself a part of the creative force and indulges the primitive instinct of his kind.

LYON & HEALY REMOVAL SALE

THIS sale has been in progress only a short time, but has attracted unprecedented attention. While it is true that a large number of pianos has been sold, there are still several hundred instruments from which to select. In fact, some of the best values are now first appearing on our floors, drawn from reserve stocks which could not be displayed in the beginning owing to limited wareroom space.

Pianos and Player-Pianos

The extent and variety of pianos shown in this great sale, including, as it does, instruments by many of the greatest makers, can only be briefly sketched in a single advertisement. But it is well within the facts to say that practically every music lover can find something that will appeal to him here.

BABY GRANDS:

A number of beautiful Baby Grands of eastern makes. These instruments would be acceptable in the homes of connoisseurs. They are strictly new; the reductions are eminently noteworthy. Just the right size for small apartments.

STEINWAY PIANOS:

Steinway uprights of styles which do not appear in current catalogues. There is only a limited number of these exquisite instruments. As far as musical value is concerned they are in every respect equal to the latest models. Reductions range from 10% to 20%.

INEXPENSIVE PIANOS:

Special Pianos which have accumulated are being closed out at far below regular quotations. For instance, there is one style of export piano which we cannot use in regular channels, owing to the war. We have marked these uprights at a reduction of 40%. They were made in the Lyon & Healy factory and are in every way desirable from a musical standpoint. Also such makes as Krakauer; Vose; Bradbury; Kranich & Bach; Kingsbury; Decker Bros.; Mason & Hamlin; Hazelton, Hardman, etc.

PLAYER-PIANOS:

Choice of a number of styles of Pianola Pianos, including instruments which have had slight demonstration use. Such well known makes as Weber; Steck; Wheelock and Stuyvesant.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS

Colony Club Has Many and Varied Interests.

By Hazel Whitaker.

THE time honored "hoodoo" associated with the number thirteen has no fears for the members of the Illinois Colony club, which was organized in 1911 by Mrs. Frederick H. Greene, with thirteen departments, each representing one of the thirteen original colonies of the United States.

One of the "lucky thirteen," the Virginia colony and Powhattan village, of which Mrs. Charles M. Aldridge is chief, is entertaining the members of the other colonies on Tuesday at the Auditorium at its annual fort meeting. The commander in chief, Mrs. D. Harry Hammer, introduces the program. Mrs. C. A. Butler will talk on the colony history. The address on "The Responsibility of Citizenship," by Lieut. Gov. Barratt O'Hara will be the special feature, for in this talk the lieutenant governor expects to point out the advantages and possibilities of the franchise for women.

"With malice toward none, with charity toward all," is the Lincoln motto that so admirably states the aims and ideals of the Illinois Colony club, now one of the largest women's organizations in the state, with its membership of over 900.

The governing body in each is composed of a council of seven elected by the entire club, a record keeper, a purse holder, a historian, and the chairmen of the various committees. These, with the chief, comprise the board of managers. Each colony is further designated by the name of a tribe of Indians, and has its own motto and industry apart from the general or, in colony parlance, the continental council.

And their charities, what are they? Within the last few months comfortable "last day" homes have been provided for a "left all alone" aged man and two women, one fee being $300, another $300, and the third $50. At Christmas the members of one colony took as their special charges the crippled children of the Fallon school; each child there made out its own list of "heart's desires," which were fulfilled by the individual members of the colony, and, in addition, a fruit basket was sent each child with funds provided from the colony purse.

The last two quarterly reports from the colonies show a total of $2,755 expended within the last nine months for philanthropy.

On April 19 Pennsylvania colony and Susquehanna village entertain, and on May 13 the annual May breakfast will be held at the Auditorium for the 935 members. This function does not, however, mark the close of the season, for only during July and August are the regular meetings suspended.

The present continental council is as follows: Mrs. D. Harry Hammer, commander in chief; Mrs. Freeman E. Brown, captain in chief; Mrs. John Buss Seymour, record keeper in chief; Mrs. Archibald M. Cameron, lieutenant in chief; Mrs. William D. Hurlbut, purse holder in chief; Mrs. Thomas Starr Harper, historian in chief; Mrs. Joseph S. Bousquet, auditor in chief.

DOWNTOWN CLUBS.

The Chicago Woman's club will hold its regular literary meeting in recital hall, Fine Arts building, Wednesday at 2 p. m. The day is in charge of Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, chairman of the conservation committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and the subject is "Our Greatest Asset—Nature." Three orchestra concerts are given each Sunday in Fullerton hall, Art institute, those in the afternoon being at 3 and at 4:15, and the evening concert which is devoted to opera music, is at 8. The "Ballet of the Seasons" is to be one of the most artistic features of the Junior league "Follies" at the Auditorium theater on Tuesday evening, April 25, for the benefit of the Junior league rest rooms for self-supporting girls, the Visiting Nurse association, and other worthy home charities. The Misses Doris Russell, Virginia Foley, Eleanor West, Marjson Scott, Marion Strobel, Isabella Holt, Elizabeth Hinde, Florence Harris, Josephine Murison, Harmon Bailey, Leila Leonard, Edith Ware, Margaret Talbot, and Lucy Arrick will be featured in the opening dance. There is much mystery surrounding the identity of the Spirit of Spring, who is to be selected from among the best of the young men dancers. The costumes for this figure will be flowing Grecian robes trimmed with garlands of flowers. The scene opens with the Spirit of Spring asleep and the young spring maids dance gayly in and try to awaken him. He gradually awakes and joins in joyous romps with the maidens, dancing off and giving way to Summer, whose sheaves of ripening grain, blooming flowers, and grasses finally blend into Autumn with her brilliant shades and colorings. The Spirit of Autumn, done by Donald MacDonald the coach, does an exotic dance after sipping the wine and grapes offered by the leaf clad maidens, and cold, unwelcome Winter then approaches and chills Autumn with her mantel of snow. Autumn slowly draws away in his mantle of leaves and reluctantly departs, leaving Winter in her icy triumph.

An entertainment and dance will be given at the Hotel Gladstone, 6200 Kenwood avenue, on Wednesday, April 19. The proceeds will be donated to the Scottish branch of the British Red Cross. Mrs. Alex J. Thomson of 6430 Ellis avenue, Mrs. Charles Strong, and Mrs. George M. Popham are the organisers of the affair.

The Guaranty Plan eliminates that.

No longer is it necessary for you and your family to be without the pleasures, benefits and advantages of a car.

The Guaranty Plan makes it possible for you to get your car now.

And the day you drive that car home, life will take on a new interest for every member of the family.

In a hundred ways every day your car will enable you to do things easily that are now a task.

There will be pleasant short trips on holidays and week-ends—and enjoyable long tours when vacation time comes.

You will lead a bigger life in a bigger world—and the Guaranty Plan makes it possible for you to begin now.

Cars are better than they ever were before—prices were never so low—upkeep was never so moderate.

Remember, any car on this list can now be yours on the new Guaranty (time payment) Plan. Make your first payment and drive home in your own car.

THE CHICAGO SYMPHONY CONCERT AUDIENCE

By a Regular Patron.

WITH other seekers after a highbrow culture and a few hours during the week in which to sit still beyond the range of a telephone, I have spent every Friday winter afternoon during the last twenty years at the Chicago Symphony orchestra concert. I got the habit when I was young; when it was the outward and visible sign of an inwardly disordered brain not to think Wagner queer. And whoever said that habits formed in childhood are hard to break did not know. It is impossible to change them. My hair is getting gray, I have five made to order teeth, my children tell me what kind of clothes to wear, and I have heard Beethoven's Fifth immortal symphony twenty-seven times, still without the slightest mental effort I find myself every Friday at 2:14 p. m. rushing madly down Michigan avenue.

If the warning bell stops ringing before I get through the doors I am doomed to stand outside and gossip for ten minutes, more or less. One afternoon, several years ago, I gave my tickets to a friend, but, so strong is custom, I appeared at Orchestra hall as usual, and the smiling ticket taker passed me through without any. Fortunately there were some vacant seats in the rear, into one of which I sank. And to ease my conscience I persuaded my husband that night to write a check for the pension fund.

During my faithful novitiate I have learned that a symphony has four parts, the first fast, second slow, third sprightly, and the last fast again (although they may be changed about some, if the composer has indigestion); that a Tone-Poem is the latest musical form of self-expression; that Schoenberg is only the beginning of our cacophonous cultivation; and that Bach is very melodious, even if we do hate to see his name appear on the program. However, as I am one of those perfectly unauthentic critics who simply knows what she likes herself. I do not intend to speak about the music. (For that see Mr. De Lamarter's weekly reviews. Besides a professional ear, he has a smooth flow of language which will furnish you with effective phrases for dinner conversations.)

My subject is the audience. Individuals may come, individuals may go, but types go on forever. There will always be the suburbanite who comes in town one day a week, with a shopping list as long in February or April as on the 23d day of December. Most of her small packages she brings to Orchestra hall with her for fear they might be lost in sending. Then, too, she does not object to carrying bundles nor to counting them during every pianissimo number of the program, to see if she has mislaid any. Only when she brings freshly ground coffee do I mind. It is such an aggravation.

While the music is wafting other shut-eyed souls to Elysian fields, this strenuous commuter remembers numerous other things that should have been on her list, and soon after the intermission she departs to get them, and to meet her husband on the 5:10 train. Inveriably she has to send the usher back for her rubbers or umbrella. (Who would not forget such nuisances on a sunshiny day? But that is one of the thrilling lotteries of living in the country. You never can tell what will happen before you get back.)

Years ago I thought that people went to concerts because they loved music or wished to learn something about it. That is no longer true. It has become the fashion, and no one who wants to be anybody can stay away. A group of congenial friends, who come to gossip, have "just the loveliest time" talking about "Sara's cabaret dinner party," "the man Becky is engaged to," and "that hideous dress of Martha's that cost $230," over a counter-point [as the program notes would express it] of "he saids" and "she saids." Nor is that all. Every one of them chews gum—not in time to the music! [Take heed, ye gods, of rhythm.]

A woman who sits three seats away is almost as distracting. She reads during the entire program. And, being a little near sighted, it takes me at least three numbers to find out what is the name of the very latest best seller in which she is absorbed. Recently she has been bringing the Saturday Evening Post, which is a great relief. Her severely tailored clothes, mannish hats, and black rimmed eyeglasses made me accuse her of being an old maid, but last week she took off her gloves, revealing a wedding ring. You never can tell! I wonder whether she reads while mending her husband's socks? But what a foolish question. Of course he wears the insured variety.

I must not fail to mention several music teachers near by who criticize every piece while it is being played. I suppose I should appreciate the superior knowledge of specialists, but, sad to say, I never agree with them, and prefer my own point of view. What their ideas of perfection, or even creditable performance, is, I cannot imagine—nothing this side of an angel band playing on golden horns with harp accompaniment.

Men who come to the concerts are divided into three classes: Musical critics, who have to come and are easily distinguishable; men who live to come, also with obvious trade marks, and a scattering of tired business men, who come to please their wives. There are some small boys and girls, too; no doubt brought so that they will have the proper appreciation of music when they grow up. I hope I shall live long enough to see if it works the same way "taking the children to church" did in my husband's family.

Mr. Stock is considered a genius in the art of program making, but I often wish that he could arrange so as not to have a last piece. The few who remain for it commence putting on their hats and veils at the first loud note from the orchestra. Evidently, most of them expect to pose for their portraits immediately afterwards, for they carefully adjust each lock and hairpin, with the aid of pocketbook mirrors and whispered conversations with their neighbors.

This question of hats is a momentous one at the present time, anyway. During the life of the bushel basket style of millinery, when one pompadour alone, in front of you obstructed the view of the entire stage, nothing was said. Once I heard a woman refuse to take off her hat when asked to do so by the man back of her. An usher, the head usher, and Mr. Voegeli, were equally unsuccessful. She insisted that a concert hall was not a theater, and that according to the city ordinance she could keep on her headpiece if she wanted to. If Mr. Stock had been called on he probably would have failed.

Now, since turbans and plastered locks have become the fashion, rebellious people in the back seats, in front of curtains, or the side wall, must sit bareheaded. Only boxholders are exempt, and that may not be for long.

After all, in spite of the idiosyncracies of the audience, if I did not thoroughly enjoy the concerts, I would not go week after week, neither would the hundreds of others who find there inspiration, recreation, and a joy that does not fade with the last echo of music.

Passion Week Services at the Garrick

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

PASSION week services will be held in the Garrick theater, beginning tomorrow noon and continuing each day until and including Friday. The meetings will be conducted jointly by the Rev. James M. Gray, dean of the Moody Bible institute, and the Rev. John Timothy Stone, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church. Dr. Gray and Dr. Stone will divide the time at each service, both speaking every day except tomorrow, when Dr. Gray will occupy all of the time. A male choir selected from the students of the Moody Bible institute will furnish the special music.

For centuries the fifth week in Lent, beginning the second Sunday before Easter, has been known as Passion week, and the week immediately preceding Easter has been known as Holy week. Nevertheless, there is much misunderstanding concerning these events in Protestant churches. The use of the term Passion week for Holy week or Easter week is common in church papers and announcements. It probably grows out of the consideration that Christ's supreme passion in Gethsemane and on the cross occurred in the days immediately preceding Easter. But dictionaries, histories, and all ecclesiastical authorities place Passion week as the week beginning with Passion Sunday, which is today, and ending with Palm Sunday, which is next Sunday. The week preceding Easter is Holy week.

The Rt. Rev. John Newton McCormick, bishop of western Michigan, will be the special preacher for a union service which the parishes and missions of the Episcopal church along the Burlington road will hold on Good Friday. It will be the regular three hour service, from 12 to 3 o'clock, and will be held in Emmanuel Episcopal church, La Grange. The churches which will take part are St. Michael and All Angels of Berwyn, St. Mary's of Morton Park, Grace church of Hinsdale, St. Andrew's of Downers Grove, St. John's of Naperville, Emmanuel church of La Grange, and All Saints' church of Western Springs.

William F. Hypes of Marshall Field & Co. and President James G. K. McClure of McCormick Theological seminary also will take part in the club program. The organ recital will be by Edgar A. Nelson, and in addition to anthems by the choir of 100 there will be solos by Mrs. Mabel Sharp Herdien and John B. Miller, members of the club quartet.

This will be Dr. Speer's third appearance before the Sunday Evening club. Though never ordained a minister, he ranks as one of the world's best known laymen and was one of the few honored with the degree of doctor of divinity in the absence of numerous books, among them "Missions and Politics in Asia," "Missions in Modern History," "The Marks of a Man," and "Christianity and the Nations." He is a graduate of Princeton university. He will preach at 11 o'clock at the University of Chicago.

Robert E. Speer of New York, who recently returned from the Isthumus of Panama, where he was a prominent figure in the congress on Christian work in Latin America, will address the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall this evening. Dr. Speer is secretary of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions.

Lenten services in Catholic churches include the following: At the Holy Family church, Twelfth and May streets, tonight and Wednesday evening lectures will be delivered by the Rev. Joseph E. Kennedy, S. J., and the Rev. J. A. McCarthy, S. J. At the Most Precious Blood church, Western avenue and Congress street, the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Kelley will speak next Wednesday evening on "Peace." At Our Lady of Lourdes church, Ashland and Leland avenues, the Rev. W. J. Bergin, C. S. V., will speak tonight. The annual solemn novena of Tuesdays in honor of St. Anthony will begin this week in St. Peter's church, Polk and Clark streets, and at St. Augustine's church, Laflin and Fifty-first streets. The feast of St. Anthony occurs June 13. At the Church of the Assumption, 313 West Illinois street, the Rev. John Sheehan, O. S. M., will preach every morning at 8 o'clock.

The Rev. George Gunnell, rector of Trinity church, Toledo, O., will speak this week, beginning tomorrow, at the Majestic theater in the noonday Lenten services under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal church. During holy week the speaker each day will be the Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, bishop of Chicago. The meetings begin at 12:10 and close at 12:30.

The Rev. Thos. F. Burke.

The Rev. Thomas F. Burke, C. S. P., is superior of the Chicago branch of the Paulist fathers. He is also pastor of St. Mary's church at South Wabash avenue and Ninth street. Because St. Mary's is the pioneer Catholic church in Chicago, and because there are other churches bearing the name of St. Mary, it is often spoken of as Old St. Mary's. Father Burke will speak tonight at Corpus Christi church, Grand boulevard and Forty-ninth street, on the subject, "Why Confess Our Sins to a Priest?" He will speak next Wednesday evening at St. Mary's on "The Mother of Charity." At St. Mary's today Father William J. Finn, C. S. P., will preach at 11 o'clock on "Spiritual Efficiency," and the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Francis C. Kelley, president of the Catholic Church Extension society, will preach at 8 o'clock on the subject of "Comfort."

Father Burke came to Chicago last August as successor to the Very Rev. P. J. O'Callaghan, who went to Washington, D. C. He came to Chicago from Toronto, Canada, where he founded a Newman society in the University of Toronto for the benefit of Catholic students.

Father Burke is in demand as a speaker before various societies. He will speak next Wednesday night, following his service at the church, before the Builders' club.

Father Burke and his assistants maintain numerous societies and charities. Persons come to the church from all sections of the city. A 3 o'clock mass is maintained for downtown night workers, and is attended by from 300 to 400 each morning.

Moving pictures will be shown at the St. Paul Protestant Episcopal church, Fiftieth street and Dorchester avenue, tomorrow at 4 o'clock in giving religious instruction to children. Films entitled "Infancy of Our Lord," "His Childhood," "The Works of Our Lord," are among those which are being used in this service, which is held weekly. "The Events of Holy Week" is another film which will be exhibited. The Trinity Protestant Episcopal church, Twenty-sixth street and Michigan avenue, is another church which is making use of moving picture films.

The Trinity Evangelical Lutheran of Oak Park, located at Ridgeland avenue and Erie street, will build a new church costing $35,000, which it hopes to have completed next fall in time for the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the church's organization. Today at 3 o'clock the corner stone for the new structure will be laid. The pastor, the Rev. J. M. Bailey, will lay the corner stone. The Rev. C. C. Morhart of Cleveland, O., and the Rev. A. Barting of Austin will be the speakers. The new auditorium will seat 500. The present building, which has been outgrown, will be used as a parish house after the completion of the new building. L. Klein is chairman of the building committee, E. E. Roberts is the architect, and Hansen Bros. & Co. are the contractors.

Gipsy Simon Smith, cousin of Gipsy Rodney Smith, will assist the Rev. William A. Frye, pastor of the Woodlawn Park Methodist Episcopal church, Woodlawn avenue and Sixty-fourth street, in a series of special services, beginning this evening. Like his cousin, he is acquainted from personal experience with the life of a gipsy and will on one evening lecture on the subject, "From the Wild Gipsy Camp to the Pulpit." A massmeeting for men will be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Gypsy Simon Smith sings, and, it is said, has the same plaintive melody in his tones which captivated the great crowds which heard Gypsy Rodney Smith when he held meetings a few years ago in one of the armories in Chicago.

The St. James Methodist Episcopal church, Ellis avenue and Forty-sixth street, will hold special services, beginning this evening and continuing nightly until Easter. The Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell, the pastor, will preach and the St. James choir will sing.

The day for decorating the graves of deceased ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church under the auspices of the Veterans of the Cross Fellowship has been changed from Monday, May 15, to Sunday, June 18. The change, it is believed, will insure a more abundant supply of flowers. There are 250 deceased ministers of Rock River conference. The service will be observed nationally and the children will assist, but different localities will select a time deemed most suitable to local conditions.

The chapel of the Wesley Memorial hospital, Twenty-fifth and South Dearborn streets, will be dedicated today at 3 o'clock. Parley Lowe will preside, the Rev. M. W. Sattierfield will read a historical sketch, and addresses will be made by the Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell and Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer.

The Chicago presbytery will hold its annual meeting tomorrow at the Kenwood Evangelical church, Forty-sixth street and Greenwood avenue, beginning at 10 o'clock. Commissioners will be elected to the Presbyterian general assembly, which will meet in Atlantic City, N. J., beginning May 18. The Rev. G. K. Newell is moderator of the Chicago presbytery and the Rev. Albert J. McCartney is pastor of the Kenwood church.

The Lasi and Brotherhood Bible classes of the Belden avenue Baptist church will hold their sixth annual joint banquet at the Fort Dearborn hotel tomorrow evening at 6:30. The subject of the addresses will be, "Church Publicity." The speakers will be furnished by the Chicago Advertising club.

Bishop W. F. McDowell will officiate with Bishop William Burt and Bishop Joseph F. Berry in the dedication of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Grand Rapids, Mich. The dedicatory ceremonies will begin today and continue through next Sunday. The church building cost $175,000 and will seat, when its Sunday school rooms are opened into the main auditorium, 2,000.

The Rock River conference will celebrate the seventy-sixth anniversary of its founding on Aug. 26. A memorial stone with a suitable inscription will be placed on the site of the old log house in Mount Morris, Ill., where the first conference was held in 1840. In the original house there were no windows and no door. The alumni of Mount Morris seminary and college, which was originally a Methodist institution, afterwards sold to the Dunkards, will hold a reunion Aug. 25 and an old settlers' day will be held by Mount Morris Aug. 24, thus making a three days' celebration.

The speakers today at the dedication services of the Morgan Park Congregational church, which began last Sunday, will be: 11 a. m., the Rev. Henry F. Cope; 3 p. m., Christian Endeavor service, with four addresses; 7:30 p. m., the Rev. W. T. McElveen of Evanston.

Archbishop Mundelein will administer the sacrament of confirmation at the following churches: Today at 3 p. m., St. Sebastian's church; Tuesday at 10:30 a. m., Our Lady of the Angels; Friday at 10:30 a. m., Assumption (Italian) church.

The Most Difficult Thing to Overcome Is Prejudice

WE find scores of women whose figures really require laced in front Corsets, but having been incorrectly fitted with models absolutely unsuited to their particular type become impressed with the idea that corsets lacing in the front are not comfortable, nor as shapely as their figures require, and that they are built for one type only. This is not true, as we demonstrate in our daily fittings of

Gardenia Laced in Front Corset

Values in Gardenia Laced in Front Corsets speak for themselves—the idea of quality is strictly adhered to. We lay particular stress on the variety of models for individual types.

Illustrated are models for five distinct types.

No. 4—A well proportioned Corset designed for medium full figure requiring a low bust and medium high, well-fitting shoulder, made of beautiful pink silk batiste. Price, $7.50.

Efficient Easter Corsets
Third Floor—Center

Yes, a corset can or can not be efficient; that is, have and exercise the power to produce results. A Warner corset, properly selected and fitted, is the most efficient garment you wear in bringing comfort and a stylish figure. A fitting here means a scientific fitting. It means the very latest advance models, it means that you get a service that no other store equals. Our aim is individuality. We show special models for stout, medium and slender figures. We see to it that you get your particular model to care for the body structure properly; it also means making the best of your own good lines, which could never be done if your figure was forced into a wrong type. Do you know that Warner's line is the most extensive one made—that there is no figure that they have not a specially designed corset for? For our fitting service no extra charge is made.

For the figure with bulging thighs—they can be trained back to their proper size, it is admirably done in a special Warner's Corset made of Coutil very well boned, bust 4½ inches high and cut a trifle higher in back. This Corset is held very closely about the lower thighs by three firm hooks at bottom of front steel. There is an elastic lacing over thighs which gives with the movement of the limbs; after wearing this Corset correctly for a few months the "bulge" will disappear, at..... $5

Warner's Corsets for the short, plump woman who really requires a low bust. Any Corset is uncomfortable that pushes up under the arm. This model has a low bust, full enough so the figure rests easily and is not pushed up. It is curved at side which gives it the smaller waist effect, the moderately long skirt is so cut that there is ample room for a moderately full figure. The back below the waist line is flat. The back wires at bottom are shorter than formerly. This Corset spells comfort for the woman who finds it very hard to get her correct model, at..... $3

Warner's Corsets for the petite figure with no flesh development, which really requires only a protection at the waist line and slightly below that point, they need only the lightest and smallest form of a Corset, but it must be well made and lightly boned. These Corsets are a modification of the Corsets for the average figure, at..... $2

Of Course You'll Wear a Brassiere for Easter
Third Floor—Center

for a brassiere, more than anything you wear, tends to give the best a trig, trim appearance, and the graceful contour so necessary for the correct lines for your Easter gown. The Colonial styles call for the high bust corset, but many women still cling to the low bust—because, with a right fitting brassiere, such as Warner's, all women, tall, short, slim or stout, can have the rounded bust, with the shoulders well thrown back. Warner's brassieres are made for all types of figures; there are models for utility and dress wear, made of plain or embroidered materials—some of them figure rectifying. You never see protruding flesh in the back, at the armholes, if a Warner brassiere is worn, because the backs are made broad and close enough to fit the arms closely. If you are in doubt as to what style is best adapted to your needs, our expert selling staff, who have made a study of individual requirements, will advise and help you in your selection.

For the very full figure Warner's brassieres, made of extra firm material, hook in front, trimmed with Torchon lace; sizes 34 to 52; at..... 50c

Warner's brassieres for the full figure, requiring a long line from shoulder to waist line, all-over embroidery and filet lace, sizes 34 to 48, at..... $1

Warner's brassieres, made to fit the short, stout woman, who always has to cut off the bottom of a brassiere, embroidery trimmed, sizes 36 to 48, at..... 1.50

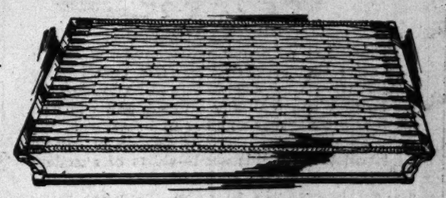
With Every Brass Bed Purchased Tomorrow a 7.50 "Don't Sag" Bed Spring for $1

Ninth Floor



We induced the manufacturers to make this most astonishing offer for one day only, after a great many other plans had been presented to them for giving quick publicity to this matchless bed spring, because we had tried it before and we know that every person who secures a spring that we and every other store asks $7.50 for regularly for $1 will tell many others about it, providing it has merit, and we doubt if there has ever been a bed spring offered with as much real merit as the "Don't Sag"; the frame is made of 1½ inch steel tubing, with a 6½ inch elevation; the spring is made of a flexible open center cable fabric fastened to the frame with elastic helical springs, all cables interlocked with clamps made so they cannot catch and tear the bed clothes; 1½ inch reinforced flat woven banded edge which will hold any weight; a standard $7.50 bed spring for tomorrow at $1 with the purchase of any brass bed in our store. As to our brass bed values shop around and, like so many others, you'll find for yourself how much lower our prices are than elsewhere—for instance, note the following:

Fashion's Guide Posts

A ruff from the days of Charlotte Corday is of black taffeta ribbon, with a rosette and streamers of velvet, and a long stemmed American Beauty rose.

Ideal for sports wear is a suit of cravenetted Shetland knit jersey cloth, made with the drop shoulder and lined with jersey silk.

Clocks have returned unto their own, on the new spring hosiery. Some of the smart ones also have horizontal stripes and are drop stitched from the boot tops up.

Rather a novel idea—that of having a mirror and change purse on the outside of one's bag. But you wouldn't know it unless you turned back the double tab on the side of this clever seal bag.

A sports dress for misses, delightfully picturesque, has a blouse of novelty checked taffeta, and a sash, collar, cuffs and pleated skirt of white crepe de chine.

To add to the attractiveness of one's spring suit, there is a collar of organdie, with seed embroidery in bright colors and an attractive design around the edge, worked in beads.

Have you seen the new hat "Vang," the Chinese name for the latest inspiration from the Orient? This sunny sailor—bright as the sun—has attracted two wonderful Chinese birds, which perch saucily on the brim.

THIS WEEK IS YOUR LAST CHANCE

To Secure Some of These Wonderful Bargains in Hand Embroidered Oriental Silks, Mandarin Coats, Etc.

More than three-fourths of this enormous lot have been sold and every single piece remaining will be sold by Saturday night, for we have accepted an offer from a large Eastern concern to buy every piece we have left at that time. Until then, we offer all those that are left at prices considerably reduced—so low that only the fact that these are the last justifies the reduction.

Fine silk shawls, richly hand embroidered, at only $4.95 and $7.50.

Richly hand em'd silk Mandarin coats at $8.75, $10.50, $12.50, and $15.00.

Embroidered Opera Capes at $10.00 and $12.50.

Elegantly embroidered Pongee silk dress patterns at from $15.00 to $25.00.

Also a limited quantity of those beautiful Oriental cotton crepe hand embroidered robes at $1.95 and $2.95 which have not been reduced.

Every cultured woman feels a fond affection for these fine hand embroidered oriental silks. The above affords a most exceptional opportunity. To illustrate—these little shawls at $4.95 each would be very cheap at several times that price. It is an opportunity.

A new and attractive model by Mme. Marguerite will be worn by Miss Ethel Hill in the robe section tomorrow. Don't fail to see it.

Where Imitation Is a Talent, Not a Vice; Case of Miss Janis.

By Percy Hammond.

THE topic of this Sabbath morning's comment upon the drama should be, no doubt, "The Weavers," that solemn reminiscence of tribulation among the dog eating peasants of Silesia in the early 90s. Although it is a play by Herr Hauptmann, it has the futile façade of an empty ruin, useless and quasi-picturesque, and it is a stereotyped stopping point in the itinerary of the Cook's tourists of the theater. Despite the wonderfully planned simplicity of its performance and the awesome mature of its auspice, it classes as a curiosity or a superstition, and so, save for the incense burners, it suggests little enthusiasm. It is as much a spectacle as "Town Topics," and I imagine it is just as amusing to our numerous "walking delegates," if to no other.

Shall I, then, write of "Everyman's Castle," in which Mr. McGuire, that stuttering and inarticulate missioner to probity, murmurs an outcry on behalf of the oath of Hippocrates? Something tells me that I must not. Mr. McGuire is of the belief that one should not start a thing unless she can finish it, but his expounding of this opinion is shallow, without form, and it neglects to align squarely the arguments for and against. He is somewhat sure that every child should be born, and his airy attitude in the matter deserves a more eloquent and a more interesting and logical utterance.

"Everyman's Castle" dismissed, I come to "The Eternal Magdalene," a play fraught with sympathy for the woman who has sinned and is sorry. Miss Julia Arthur copiously irrigates this drama with the lachrymal brine which fertilizes the aisle seats, making rich harvest for the ticket broker. But, if I may be permitted to do so, I shall cultivate a slight tare within the auspicious crop. In the excitement attendant upon its advent into a big town the management misreads THE TRIBUNE'S remarks about "The Eternal Magdalene" and quotes it as saying that the play is a "monumental masterpiece," et cetera. THE TRIBUNE does not say that about "The Eternal Magdalene," because it believes otherwise. That there may be no further shake about its attitude concerning "The Eternal Magdalene," THE TRIBUNE will state that:

"The Eternal Magdalene" is a deep, shoddy, awkward frameup, a maudlin capitalization of a matter that deserves sane and intelligent consideration from quarters neither mercenary nor sentimental. It is mawkish, expedient blah-blah, and even if, as "The Tribune" indulgently did say that it is a masterpiece compared with other similar things, it is still an insult to the adult playgoer.

After at eulogy than at expostulation, I select Miss Elsie Janis as the subject of today's panegyric. Miss Janis will perhaps be astounded to know that she is great; yet my impressions to that effect are corroborated by many persons of taste, discernment, and business judgment, including Miss Ethel Barrymore and the treasurer of the Palace Music hall. I have listened to Miss Barrymore speak of Miss Janis' talents without the qualification of a single "but," and they tell me at the Palace that Miss Janis as a lure to the opulent vaudeville patron comes next to the First Actress. She is rather a miracle, Miss Janis, with her implicit satires on the actor folk, satisfying while acidly censuring.

This time her impressionistic expeditions are most daring. She does not imitate Mme. Bernhardt, for instance, in a familiar Bernhardt stunt, but, like a true sportswoman, she deftly caricatures the vox celeste singing "Tipperary," something that you have never heard Bernhardt sing. Frank Tinney she impinges upon a recitation of "The Village Blacksmith," and Nazimova she causes to warble "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier," which is not at all what Nazimova has been warbling in the varieties this year. These representations are uncannily letter-perfect, though they have the savor, in the case of Nazimova, Bernhardt, and Barrymore, of a satiric grin that ampesies artfully without much disparagement.

Miss Janis' gift of subtly and genially imitating people of definite personality is, perhaps, no more astonishing than the gift of good teeth or a pleasing tenor voice, or an ability to juggle. But her facility for criticism or caricature is to be attributed to nothing else than genius. She is remarkable for the deft nuance or exaggeration of her impressions. She imitates Eddie Foy; she cartoons Miss Barrymore, and that is exactly what she should do. Sometimes I think that her mimicry of Mr. Foy, because it is so deep and accurate, is a sort of Frankenstein; it leaps out upon you when it isn't wanted, and there is always a tinge of it in everything she does. I suppose that it is absurd to say that she is as funny as Mr. Tinney or as Mr. Cohan, plus the enjoyment of an astounding feat of imitation, but I would much rather see her as either of them than see the amusing originals. And nothing is more pleasing to the eye and the sense of humor than her impersonation of herself slimly dancing to easy tunes. The magic is a strange art, and its operation more seriously might be an interesting histrionic speculation.

Burns Mantle's Theater Letter from New York.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Bernard Shaw again to the rescue. Grace George, with her repertory fixed but fading as the spring came, revived "Captain Brassbound's Conversion" last week and picked up the interest of the crowd—aye, the crowd—as well as that of the would-be intellectuals, immediately.

An interesting state of affairs when Shaw the faddist of other days becomes Shaw the savior of today. Time was when to suggest a revival of a Shaw play to a stock company manager would be to court a tongue lashing, if nothing worse.

Now he is become all but "sure fire," as the manager has it. Another season we fear he will be actually popular. Not for a play or two. Not for a three week run of this or that outspoken comedy that receives the indorsement of Mrs. High Society's drama group. But for all the plays of the twenty-year-old repertory. For anything he has written or finds time to write. Two years from now we are willing to wager he will be the most popular of English speaking playwrights. And ten years ago we feared he would have to die to gain so much real success in the theater.

"Captain Brassbound" is not entirely new to America as an acted drama. Ellen Terry devoted a season to it in 1907—a charmingly "forgetful" season, if you happen to recall it, in which the dear lady, the most alluring feminine personality England has contributed to the stage of our day, was in the habit of forgetting her lines so frequently and covering up the slip so cleverly that she added an unexpected bit to the comedy value of the performance.

It is claimed that Shaw had Miss Terry in mind when he wrote "Brassbound," as Barrie did when he wrote "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire," which Charles Frohman cruelly took away from her and gave to Ethel Barrymore for America—but, if so, she did not play it for nearly ten years after the script was finished.

Miss George makes Lady Cicely Waynflete rather more romantically inclined than Miss Terry was able to do, thus adding something to the playing value of the entertainment and detracting a trifle from its logic. With Robert Warwick, still handsome and just a shade more given to posing since he went into pictures, as Brassbound, one feels the inevitable lure of sex.

When Robert would carry Lady Cicely and her jurist brother into the heart of Morocco with the confessed intention of turning them over to the Arabs the scene is set for a genuinely old-fashioned romance. This Cicely is still young and above the average in attractiveness.

And when, after the captain's conversion and after he has repeated the simple annals of his pirate's life to the wondering Cicely, after he has asked her as a very great favor to go on boasting him, ruling him, commanding him, as she has done so successfully from their first meeting, there is nothing but the drooping eye and the ante-nuptial curtain clutch needed to give the play a real melodramatic finish. But the tag saves it.

Cicely, fearing she has met her match at last, and about to weaken, though she admits she doesn't want to, and probably never can, love the bandit, is saved by the call of the wild boat's whistle summoning Brassbound. He takes to the sea again, leaving her dazed but still free on shore.

"What an escape!" she sighs, and sinks limply into a chair. She has had an exciting, her auditors a most diverting, evening.

It remained for Sir Herbert Tree to call attention to the Negro theater in New York. Sir Herbert was an invited guest there last Sunday and was to have seen a performance of "Othello," with the cast made up entirely of blacks. But the police, jealous of the attention the affair created, refused to let the show go on. Vaudeville is a sacred concert, but a serious dramatic entertainment—that is something else again in New York and cannot be permitted on a Sabbath day.

But Sir Herbert attended just the same. So did Mrs. Patrick Campbell and a number of Sir Herbert's actors. They sat in a stage box, and after a time the guest of the evening went upon the stage and made a speech, congratulating the colored actors upon their enterprise and their desire to help in celebrating the Shakspearean tercentenary. After which Mrs. Campbell was cheered and responded with both a smile and a bow.

Then the principal actor of the troupe, Willard Wright, just to prove that he could do it, read a speech from "Othello" with considerable impressiveness of manner and delivery. He made a sensible speech to the audience, too, insisting that there was not the slightest reason why the colored race could not or should not honor Shakspeare.

"I am a man, and whatever interests mankind interests me," he quoted from one of the poets of his race, and his auditors, both white and black, applauded him with considerable fervor.

The theater is called the Lafayette, and is located at Seventh avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, near the heart of a large colored population. The colored actors play a regular stock company repertoire, and their manager is proud to report that last week they did a smashing business with a revival of "Paid in Full." They will do "Othello" this week, and next month "Romeo and Juliet." A tour of the principal cities of the country later this spring is anticipated.

There seems to be a profitable business conducted in New York theaters that no one ever suspects of being a business. And that is the production of impossible plays with the invested capital of angels. If, for instance, the owner, or the son of the owner, of a successful cloak and suit business is convinced in his own mind that Pansy Hokus could make a name for herself

Musings After the Revival of an Old Oratorio

By Eric De Lamarter.

HAVING cogitated upon the ultra-modern in this column last week, let us meditate today upon the temerity of the choral conductor who faces toward the past and its classics with a loyalty which would arouse envy even in Lhasa. But, as we proclaim our text and pause to wipe the eyeglass ere we plunge into the "firstly, my brethren," let us tender a vote of thanks to Mr. H. W. Owens, who had the courage to revive Haydn's "The Seasons" a couple of nights ago, with the Haydn Choral society.

This performance was entirely worthy, according to oratorio standards. Let that fact stand against the comment to follow. These works, "The Seasons" and "The Creation," have fallen into innocuous desuetude during the last generation. The usual explanation given is that "where opera enters oratorio vanishes." Meditation on this point gives painful birth to another.

The standards are not discriminating. Ever so often you'll see the legend "'The Messiah' will be sung by a chorus of 1,000 voices," as if 1,000 untrained singers in a group would make the music twice as beautiful as 500 untrained singers! If this thesis is correct, why not double or treble the soloists on such occasions?—Marion Green, Gustav Holmquist, and Albert Borroff, for instance, singing "Why do the nations" in unison? It's absurd.

The inveterates of symphony and chamber music concerts, of opera, even, are rarely to be found enthusiastic at an oratorio performance. I have had word of mouth opinions from many representative concert goers as to the reason. Invariably it touches upon the "Barnumizing" of oratorio, in contrast to the utter finesse, the patience and study devoted to the preparation of a classic symphony or quartet.

It is not that interest in choral music is dead. The enthusiasm aroused by the Toronto Mendelssohn choir's part song concerts here a few years ago is the standing proof. But their repertory was far from oratorio. Hence, the trouble with oratorio cannot be that of ensemble singing: it must be in itself.

Mr. Owens' interpretation of "The Seasons" was after the accepted oratorio tradition. But we need a new tradition, unless we wish to see classic oratorio, as a form, laid away with a wreath on its breast. When a group of paintings is to be exhibited, background, angles and intensities of lights, relations to other canvases as to period, type, subject, sizes, are points considered. Apply this to a work like "The Seasons."

Let us contemplate the grace and ease, the fluency, the inexhaustible bubbling of melody, the deftness and the elegance, the quaint "tone painting" of the orchestral accompaniment, the chastity, the limpid clarity of the Haydn score.

Remember, too, that the text of "The Seasons" is from the pen of a lesser poet of the age when princesses played at being shepherdesses and were immortalized by painters like Watteau. His poem is filled with apostrophe in dignified measures; with preposterously refined conversation between Simon, a farmer; Jane, his daughter, and Lucas, a young countryman; with descriptions of nature reading like pages of Dryden; with moralisings beside which those of Such a work, frankly, is become "genre" in our day. No matter if it stood in Haydn's generation in the heroic proportions of Georg Schumann's "Ruth" in our generation—a comparison pertinent by reason of the Apollo club's performance tomorrow night. To ears accustomed to the oratorio idiom of Elgar, Bantock, Schumann, Worysch, and their brethren it is a slender thing, a score rich with the melodies of an eternal youth, but now a "manners" classic.

Consider the care with details like the correct turn of the trills, the myriad cares for subtle accent and delicate nuance of shading, the refinements of rhythm, the long study of balance devoted to a classic quartet or symphony. Remember that the men in the ranks of the instrumental ensemble are musicians of great expertness. Then place beside the confidence in the performance the thrill every choral conductor has known at one time or another. Says he to himself, after the fourth bar: "Well, the gods be praised, they've got the rhythm! Heaven send that nothing disturb it!"

No, patient reader, the signs seem to hint that, to hold its own against its competitors, new standards of performance must be established. That means greater efficiency in the singers' ranks, keener and more scientific study of period, of individual trait, of balance (think of "Messiah" performances with a chorus of 400 voices and an orchestra of thirty pieces!) of timbre contrasts. Add to the orchestral conductor's problems the problems of enunciation; of intonation, of a singing technique more difficult to acquire; add also the inertia of this very oratorio tradition—for which Handel may be thanked, in large measure.

The root of the trouble, obviously, is not in a crochety public's apathy. And a work of such chastity and purity, such sensitive poesy, such intrinsic charm as "The Seasons" is worth the effo

NEWS of the THEATERS

"A World of Pleasure," it has been decided, will be the extravaganza to occupy the Palace Music hall late in the spring. Clifton Crawford, Conroy and Le Maire, and Collins and Hart are its chief performers.

Miss Maude Adams, kept from the Illinois by the prolongation of the run of "Chin-Chin," will, it is expected, come to the Blackstone after the Boston opera-Pavlowa engagement. This seems to mean that Miss Grace George, if she comes at all this spring, will go into the Princess with her new repertoire of five plays.

Miss Helen Falconer in "Chin Chin" Illinois

Following is the arrangement of operas and principal singers for the Boston opera-Pavlowa half week in the Blackstone: Thursday, April 27, "The Love of the Three Kings," with Luisa Villani and the new basso, Mardones, who is said to be, as singer and actor, a real rival of the famed Russian, Chaliapine; Friday, "La Boheme," Miss Maggie Teyte; Saturday afternoon, "Madame Butterfly," with Tamaki Miura, the Japanese singer, and Riccardo Martin; Saturday evening, "Otello," with Victor Maurel, Zanatello, Miss Teyte and Maria Gay; Sunday afternoon, "I Pagliacci," with Zenatello and Felice Lyne, followed by Pavlowa and company in "Coppelia," to be danced in its entirety. The final program Sunday evening is to be a special affair.

De Wolf Hopper, Theodore Roberts, Tyrone Power, William Farnum, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan, Miss Constance Collier, Miss Sarah Truax, and other movie actors, are to get together on May 19 and commemorate Shakespeare in the open air by acting "Julius Caesar" in a canyon near Hollywood, Cal.

James K. Hackett's revival of "The Merry Wives of Windsor" was taken off last evening, although it had been listed as a hit, thanks to the Falstaff of Thomas A. Wise. Mr. Hackett himself is still an invalid, so he did not get the opportunity to appear as the Fat Knight, although it was for his own use he effected the revival.

Henry Miller will be the actor of the name part when, following Miss Barrymore's engagement, Miss Ruth Chatterton returns to Powers' in "Daddy Longlegs." It is expected that in the course of the engagement Mr. Miller will stage a new play.

John Mason is out of the chief part of "Common Clay," and has been replaced by Orme Caldara.

"John W. Blake" is the title of the comedy being made by Roi Cooper Magrue from some of Irvin Cobb's tales. This is an example of zero in titles. The public kept away from "Mr. Hopkinson" because it had never heard of him.

The Drama League of America will convene for the sixth annual time later in the month in St. Louis. The prospectus of the convention promises great riches for the appreciative. One of the discussional subjects will be "The Moving Picture in Its Relation to Drama: What Shall Be the League's Attitude and Policy? Shall It Bulletin the Movies?" Another is: "Present Conditions in the Theater: How Can the Gallery Audience Be Won Back? What Is the Remedy for the High Price of Seats? Can the Ticket Speculator Be Eliminated?" The relation between ticket speculators and the Drama league is something for managers to ponder.

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

if she had the opportunity, and Pansy herself has found a manuscript with just the sort of part in it she would most like to play, the rest is comparatively simple.

Pansy and the script and the gentleman with the money, or his representative, confer with a "producer." The producer reads the play, inquires tentatively how much Pansy's friends expect to spend, and agrees that probably it can be done for less than that. It can be, but it never is. Or if an amateur in love with the play he has written has money enough he can make a similar bargain.

Follows the engaging of a company of principals to give the cast a tone, a chorus and a director. Possibly a libretto carpenter to "smarten up" the story. And in due time the production is made. Not in an obscure theater on a side street, nor modestly, nor quietly. But with as fine a blare of promises as any producer could command for any production. Typewriters and press agents make no distinctions.

Latest News from Movie Land
by MAE TINEE.

HENRY OTTO, the rather famous director, was taking a picture in a great hurry. Having attended to most of the details himself he sent an assistant to find a good location for "a run on the bank." "Mind you, pick out a good one," yelled Mr. Otto. The assistant vanished and was gone several hours. When he came back he told Mr. Otto, who was frothing at the mouth, having been searching high and low for the assistant, that he had found the place. "Well, for heaven's sake tell us to it quick," Mr. Otto commanded wearily. Director, camera men, and company followed the assistant into the alley waiting outside. After a long auto ride they stopped and the assistant pointed with pride to a long green mossy bank, fronting a beautiful lawn.

The Universal company accomplished rather an unusual undertaking when it secured permission to film the interior of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament at Hollywood, Cal., for a feature production. All the denominations are strict with the use of their churches, the Catholic more than any other being opposed to having the church used for outside purposes.

May 22! Ah, 'twill be a great day! Why Billie Burke's coming to us in a wonderful new picture novel by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes entitled, "Gloria's Romance." Take it from me, it's some picture.

Gridiron-Hartman, with all the members of the Biograph company, has received notice "with regrets."

Ethel Clayton has left Lubin and gone to the World-Equitable. Carlyle Blackwell and Paul McAllister will play opposite her.

You are soon to see Florence Lawrence on the screen for the first time since she has "come back" in a Blue Bird production called "The Elusive Isabel."

The Educational and Scientific Film company has issued about 700 feet of film which marks the initial subject let out by this concern. In this film is shown the development of bacteria from a powdered lettuce leaf put in a glass of clear drinking water. What transpires is of exceeding interest to any one interested in subjects of this kind. Colonies upon colonies of various bacteria are created. Next you are introducted to hydra, the fresh water devil fish, and are shown its life and habits. Walter A. Brind is responsible for these pictures. He is the author of "Domesticated Fish," a work well known and recommended by scientists. The temporary office of the Educational and Scientific Film company is at 98 Sixth avenue, New York. It is seen that there is a large field for the labors of such men as Mr. Brind.

Lewis Waller, the English actor, makes his bow in the Universal picture, "The Brigadier General."

Gertrude McCoy picked up a snippy little kitten and took it with her to the Gaumont studio in Florida. It was glad enough for a saucer of skim milk, but now that pretty kitty will eat nothing but strictly fresh country eggs, two dozen a week, and only the choicest cream can she be prevailed upon to drink. Dear, dear, these new rich!

Edna Mason has left the Universal Film company. She will take a short holiday before determining what she will do next. Vaudeville may claim her for a time. The chances are she will not leave her own motion picture field for anything else less secure.

Charles Chaplin's auntie has writ a piece in a London paper about Charles. It is advertised as the one authentic chronicle of the comedian. Says his aunt: "Nobody really knows Charlie. None of the stories written about him has given a clue to his other self. How could they when Charlie is so very shy and nervous of that other self." She, however, declares to have made a study of the other Charlie and finds him to be not a comedian but a wonderful musician and she thinks that if he remains a picture actor the musical world will be a genius less.

Vaudeville Wit.

PALACE.

Elsie Janis imitating Frank Tinney:

"I'm going to recite serious poetry, I am. Now you must ask me why I am going to recite serious poetry. Go ahead and ask me."

"All right. Why are you going to recite serious poetry, Frank?"

"Because I'm ambitious, I am."

"I don't think it's ambition; I think it's a hangover."

"O, no, it isn't a hangover. Now you ask me why it isn't a hangover, and I'll answer you. Now this is going to be dirty. Go ahead and ask me."

"Well, why isn't it a hangover, Frank?"

"Because I was out with you last night, and it was your time to treat."

Tyler and Crollus, McVicker's:

"I want you to be my wife."

"What?"

"You heard me, and I mean every word of it, too. I ain't a bad fellow at heart—just a little spoilt."

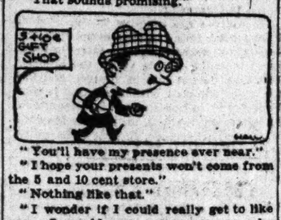
"It all seems like a dream."

"Let me be the light of your life."

"I don't want a light that goes out every night."

"I'll be your steady flame."

"That sounds promising."



"You'll have my presence ever near."

"I hope your presents won't come from the 5 and 10 cent store."

"Nothing like that."

"I wonder if I could really get to like you. I would never marry a man who doesn't make his own living."

"Oh, I've got a job in father's business."

"How much do you earn?"

"Fifty dollars a week."

"Why, $50 a week is all right."

"Yes, $50 a week is what I earn—but $7 is what I get."

FEATURE FILMS OF THE WEEK

"April"—American feature with Helene Rosson in the lead. A mountain girl who was a misfit that manages to have a romance in her life just the same.

"Bonds of Deception"—Three reel American production, in which Winifred Greenwood and Ed Coxon are featured. In this case blessed be not the tie that binds.

"Little Meena's Romance"—Griffith-Triangle production, with Dorothy Gish and Owen Moore playing the leads. The plot is based on the life of the Pennsylvania Dutch. Should be a picture well worth seeing.

"Molly Make-Believe" — Famous Players production, with Marguerite Clarke in the lead. This is a picturization of Eleanor Hallowel Abbott's book of the same name.

"Myrtle, the Manicurist"—Three part Vitagraph comedy, with Jewell Hunt in the lead. The dearth of comedy material without the w. k. manicure girl to fall back upon we hate to think of.

"Salvation Joan"—Seven act Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, with Edna May in the lead. Here you have society, the underworld, the Salvation Army, and the American secret service. Pictorial goulash.

"The Aryan" — Ince-Triangle feature, with William S. Hart taking the part of a "western bad man."

"The Great Problem"—Five reel Blue Bird Universal drama, featuring Violet Mersereau. It is a psychological problem play which is said to treat criminology from a new angle. Lettushope!

"The Leopard's Bride"—Horsely-Mutual drama featuring Margaret Gibson and the Bostock animals. A drama of romantic India.

"The Light Bearer" — Three act Essanay drama featuring Richard Travers, who is now departing on his vaudeville tour. Ah, base deserter that thou art.

"The Race"—Lasky production featuring Victor Moore and Anita King. The frivolous son of a wealthy automobile manufacturer has some adventures. If they are like the usual adventures of frivolous sons of millionaire daddies the picture will not be particularly out of the ordinary.

"The Stampede"—Three reel Biograph drama featuring Linda Arvidson. The cattle stampede.

"Under the Azure Skies"—Three reel Mustang drama with Art Acord and Nita Davis playing the leads. Out west.

"The Wives of the Rich"—Selig drama featuring Harry Mestayer. This is a society drama and a woman's love for bridge whist results in a tragedy. Better far be contented as we are.

Stationary Photoplays.

Castle—Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, "The Saleslady," Famous Players production, with Hazel Dawn in the lead. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, "Audrey," Famous Players production, featuring Pauline Frederick.

Colonial—"Civilization's Child," a five reel Kay-Bee-Triangle drama, featuring W. H. Thompson. Also "The Oily Scoundrel," a Keystone comedy.

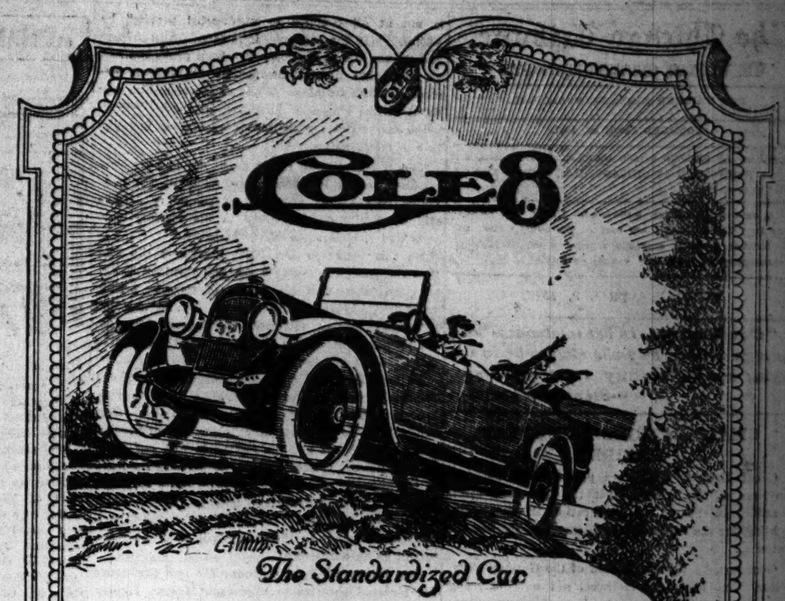
Fine Arts—"The Ne'er Do Well," Selig picturization of Rex Beach's novel. Kathlyn Williams and Wheeler Oakman are featured.

La Salle—"The Race," Lasky production, featuring Victor Moore and Anita King. Other attractions.

Strand—"The Beggar of Cawnpore," a five reel Kay-Bee-Triangle production, in which H. B. Warner is featured. "His Wife's Mistake," a Keystone-Triangle comedy.

Studebaker—"The Eternal Grind," a Famous Players drama, with Mary Pickford in the lead. Also a Burton Holmes travelogue and a comedy featuring Sidney Drew.

Ziegfeld — "The Kiss of Hate," Metro drama. Ethel Barrymore is featured. "The Havoc," a five reel Essanay production, featuring Bryant Washburn.



TEST IT ON ANY HILL YOU KNOW

In giving a demonstration of the Model 860 Cole 8 we let you pick the course.

We want you to test the car as thoroughly as you know how—for the harder the test the surer the sale.

The Model 860 Cole 8 is the example of refinements which have been made possible only by a great organization and a permanent policy of standardization.

In this V-type multiple cylinder car exists the rare combination of counterbalanced crankshaft with aluminum pistons and light reciprocating parts—the most advanced type of multiple cylinder construction.

If you have ever ridden over Hubbard Hill in any other motor car you should experience the new sensation that a ride over it in a Cole 8 will give you.

$1595 f. o. b. Factory.

—Stephen Decatur.

SMALL NATIONS AND GREAT EMPIRES.

Great Britain, whose sea power made the continuance of the war against the Germanic allies possible, is, by official declaration of principles, fighting for the integrity and security of the smaller nations.

Germany, by the declaration of the German chancellor, Von Bethmann-Hollweg, not only is ready now to reestablish peace in Europe upon a true nationalistic basis but if she brings the war to a successful result will insist upon reconstruction upon such basis.

Not only shall Belgium be free, but the Flemings in Belgium shall be free. The Polish, Lithuanian, Livonian, and other peoples of Europe "must have a chance for free evolution along the lines of their mother tongue and natural individuality."

Then, with this agreement upon principles, the war is ended? If its given causes be not merely superficialities, there is no dispute between the two alliances. Sovereignty is restored to Serbia and Belgium, to Montenegro and Albania, restored also to Poland and other nationalities which have been submerged in the great states, and Europe is reorganized with each small nation scrupulously respected in its rights to live nationally and develop in line with its cherished traditions and institutions.

There is this apparent agreement upon principles, but in the place of the restoration of lost sovereignties there is aggression against Holland and Greece and disquiet in the Scandinavian countries.

They and Switzerland feel the impulse of European policies and know them to be developing in a direction opposite to that indicated in British and German statements.

Holland feels that it is being pulled under by the necessities of the great alliances. It wants, just as Belgium wanted, nothing so much as to keep out of the war. Greece wanted nothing more than that, but it now has armies imposed upon it.

Holland knows that unless it can defend itself successfully it may be sacrificed either to the needs of one of the alliances or to the fear of one that unless the strategy of the enemy be anticipated Dutch territory will be seized by the other.

Dutch sovereignty has been respected, but the Dutch fear that it was not a moral inhibition that kept armies off but her own army that kept them off. The peril of Holland is great and continuing. If, under pressure, the Dutch joined the Germanic alliance their islands and colonies would be lost instantly to Great Britain. If they joined the entente powers they would meet the danger of conquest by the Germans. And they fear with reason that conquest would mean retention.

The position of Holland as a small state pressed by the exigencies of its greater neighbors is typical of the insecurity of the small nation, and when statesmen say that the great nations are struggling for the preservation of nationalities they must be suspected either of making diplomatic gestures or of being imposed upon by illusions.

Once away from the superficialities in the causes of the war nothing seems more apparent than that the development of Europe is towards larger combinations and federations and away from a system of small, nationalistic units.

Even so strong a nation as France must understand that its security cannot depend upon its own efforts. If it had been able to defend itself alone it would not have been in the alliance with Great Britain and Russia and it would not now be at war. France, alone, would have been helpless before the central powers. The war has proved how helpless it would have been and has indicated what its status will be after the war.

If France cannot find in itself its own protection how can any of the weak nations? Europe certainly cannot trust itself to the hope that succeeding generations will be governed by the moral antipathy to war which may control the spent nations at the end of this one.

For the development of federations and alliances of big states and the absorption of small states there are not only military but there are economic reasons. The extension of the central alliance into a tariff union is now indicated, and British, French, and Russian statesmen say that the peace which will be declared will be merely a military peace, that the war will go on in trade and that the entente powers will remain solidly joined to carry it on.

In such conditions there is little hope for the peace and integrity of small nations. The German chancellor says that Belgium, although restored in its national rights, never again will be allowed to be under a Franco-British protectorate. Then it must be under a German. An independent Belgium must be allowed to form its own policies and, if it choose, to ally itself with France or with Great Britain or both. Prevention is coercion and it denies independence.

Probably what Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg means is that Germany has learned a lesson from the British treatment of such dominions as Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and, more conspicuously, South Africa. The result of British policy in the recently subjugated Boer states was a revelation. South Africa was soundly bound to the British empire by the very freedom given its nationality.

The protection of small nationalities in their sentimental and emotional aspirations, in their language and institutions, in all the cherished things which set them apart as nations may be possible, if it goes with military and economic control. But there is little to take the color of probability from the words of Joseph Chamberlain twelve years ago:

"The day of small nations has passed away; the day of empires has come."

MAKING BAD PHILOSOPHERS.

Charles W. Eliot of Harvard makes the broad charge against American education that it is training the memory and the powers of analysis, but that it is not training the five senses.

"The inability to see, hear, and describe correctly is not at all confined to uneducated people," he writes. "On the contrary, it is often found in men and women whose education has been prolonged and thorough, but never contained any significant element of sense training. Their entire education has dwelt in the region of language, literature, philosophy, and history, with limited excursions into the field of mathematics.

"Such a deplorable result ought not to have been possible; but it has been unavoidable by the individual because the programs of secondary schools still cling almost exclusively to the memory subjects and the elements of mathematics."

To this condition Dr. Eliot attributes the fact that the American's senses are not "trained to act with precision, that his habits of thought permit vagueness, obscurity, and inaccuracy, and that his spoken or written statement lacks that measured, cautious, candid, simple quality which the scientific spirit fosters and inculcates."

Perhaps Dr. Eliot has accounted for some of the peculiarities which Americans have been so generously exhibiting for a couple of decades. Certainly there is no particular point in remembering things if one has not the ability to find out what has happened. If one is unable to perceive the facts of life there is extraordinarily little sense in learning how to discriminate and how to analyze. And if there is no ability to gather data correctly a cultivated facility in theorizing will be of no value except as an amusement.

Dr. Eliot's analysis accounts for our preference for pleasant theories to unpleasant facts. It may be the reason why Americans are a nation of philosophers, but bad ones, who build towering structures of theory on assumptions not founded in fact.

It explains why we cannot see the potential hostility of Japan; it explains Ford, and Bryan, and Jenkin Lloyd Jones, and watchful waiting.

FOR A RAILROAD POLICY.

One of the greatest problems, probably next to defense and international relations the greatest, before the nation is our railroad problem.

It is not necessary to enlarge upon the basic importance to the country and to every class in the country of an efficient and progressive system of transportation. The country cannot prosper without such a system any more than a human being can be well with defective circulation.

This is a truism and yet we tend to neglect it. Our railroad policy is no longer the costly laissez faire of a past generation. But, on the other hand, it does not represent any rounded system based on a comprehensive consideration of the whole problem. It is partial, one sided, and if it continues to be so it will most certainly result in the progressive deterioration of our transportation facilities, with its attendant loss to the manufacturer, the farmer, the merchant, and the whole consuming public as well. It also will result in the steady deterioration of the value of railroad shares, with its attendant injustice to hundreds of thousands of men and women who, seeking investment in good faith, have put money into what ought to be the safest investment in the country.

The end of such a process must be the bankruptcy of the railroads and their assumption by the government. Government ownership and operation of the railroads may be desirable or inevitable. But it ought not to be attained by a process so costly to the country and so unjust to investors.

There is the alternative of regulation, and we have made a beginning of regulation. The country probably is not ready for government ownership, and since it is not common sense and the public interest demand that we perfect our policy of regulation and give it a chance to show what it can do. It may very well prove that consistent, comprehensive regulation is better than government ownership as developed in other countries. But of that we cannot be assured until we have tried consistent, comprehensive regulation. We now have inconsistent, partial regulation, and the whole American transportation system is feeling its disastrous effects.

This condition of affairs is so apparent and so serious that the president has suggested that congress give it attention. The senate has passed a resolution authorizing an inquiry to ascertain what changes in present laws touching railways are needed, including a consideration of government ownership. Whether the house's concurrence has been given has not been noted, but in any case the plan would seem inadequate. The multiplication of commissions is an evil THE TRIBUNE often protests against, but in this case a commission of the highest character would be justified. If commission inquiries are unsatisfactory, so is the average congressional investigation, with its political and personal trivialities, its playing for partisan position, its dreary hearings, packed with irrelevancy and repetition.

What is needed in a case of such exceptional importance to the present welfare and future prosperity of the country is an inquiry by a body of the very highest character, composed not merely of politicians and lawyers, as is a congressional committee, but of men of largest experience and personal weight in the world of transportation, commerce, finance, labor, agriculture, and law.

Upon the findings of such a body congress could base new legislation which would be constructive, consistent, and comprehensive, which would correct evils at their foundation and save private ownership, if it can be saved in this country, or prepare a just transition to a nationalized transportation system.

THE TRUTH ABOUT WEST POINT.

[From the Army and Navy Journal.]

It may be said by some carping critics that West Point is all very well as a military training school, but that it serves no other purpose in our national life. The contrary is susceptible of proof. Senator Weeks of Massachusetts supplied statistics showing the civil occupations of 2,371 graduates from West Point up to 1908, who upon giving up army service took up work in civil life. One was president of the United States, one president of the confederate states, four were cabinet officers, fifteen were plenipotentiaries, twenty-four were members of congress, sixteen were governors of states and territories, one was a bishop, fourteen were judges, seventeen were mayors of cities, forty-six were presidents of universities and colleges, thirty-two were principals of academies and schools, eighty-nine were presidents of railroads and other corporations, 136 were professors and teachers, 228 were civil engineers, 122 were merchants, seventy-seven were manufacturers, and 179 were authors. These are only a few facts from the list.

Says the New York Evening Post, surely not a militarist organ: "It seems probable that, in proportion to numbers, no university or college in the United States has made a more notable contribution to the list of successful men in civil life than the West Point Military academy."

LD Sir John Górst, who has just passed away, as an octogenarian, at Castle Combe, the beautiful place in Wiltshire which he inherited somewhat late in life, had a most romantic career. Although a statesman of extraordinary brilliancy, he remains on record as having been gifted with such a tendency to satire and to sarcasm as to have compelled his retirement from the cabinet and from parliament.

He started life as a missionary in New Zealand, emigrating at the age of 25 on the invitation of the celebrated missionary, Bishop Selwyn, to help in the evangelization of the Maoris.

The story of his New Zealand life as a Church of England lay missionary to the Maoris, as a soldier, as government resident in the rebel district of Waikato, as a bush schoolmaster, as editor of a newspaper printed in Maori characters and called the Pihoihoi Mokemoke, is most fascinating. This paper was published in the interest of the Maoris, but his venture came to grief when his Maori typesetters stole the type in order to convert it into bullets.

On returning to England Sir John Górst, who was a member of the bar, became editor of the London Standard, recently defunct. He was a member of parliament successively for Cambridge, Chatham, and for Cambridge university; founded the once famous Fourth party in the house of commons, along with Arthur Balfour, Lord Randolph Churchill, and the late Sir Henry Drummond-Wolff; was appointed solicitor general, a most lucrative office, which carried with it knighthood; was then undersecretary of state for India, secretary to the treasury, and finally minister of education.

Sir John was virtually ousted from the administration and treated thenceforth as disqualified for any cabinet office by his inability to agree with any of his colleagues. The trouble with him was that he could not tolerate the lack of ability of his inferiors, especially when those inferiors were set up above himself, and those who recall his defense in the house of commons when undersecretary of state for India of the unfortunate policy of his chief, Lord Cross, the minister for India, will readily understand that his terrible gift of silky satire was an even greater peril to friend than to foe.

When he became minister of education he was a constant source of fear and trembling to his ministerial colleagues, and it used to be said that whenever he rose from his place on the treasury bench in the lower house to make a speech, Arthur Balfour and Joseph Chamberlain would range themselves on either side of him, with the object of pulling him down by his coat tails if he exceeded the bounds of strict propriety in the expression of thought. They did not always succeed, and the house got to know that when Sir John beamed with particular benevolence through his glasses and threw into his voice the gentlest tones something was coming that would set all his colleagues by the ears.

Eventually, when 74, that is to say, some six years ago, he transferred his political allegiance from the Unionist to the Liberal camp, and in directing attention to the fact that Winston Churchill had preceded him in taking this step he did not hesitate to assert that if his old friend and colleague of the Fourth party, Lord Randolph Churchill, had been alive he, too, would have joined the Liberals, who, according to him, embodied to a far greater degree than the Unionists the principles of that Tory democracy which he, Lord Randolph Churchill, Sir Henry Drummond-Wolff, and Arthur Balfour championed.

Sir John was 73 when he inherited from a maternal granduncle named Lowndes the beautiful and historic Castle Combe estate, near Chippenham, in Wiltshire, along with a large fortune, which led him to surrender to the government the pension of $6,000 a year which he had been drawing as a former cabinet minister. This act of renunciation attracted much attention at the time. For no matter how great the wealth of politicians, they are, as a general rule, disposed to hold on to any pension that they may have earned for services to the state.

The Castle Combe estate was owned by the Scrope family for nearly 600 years, going to the Lowndes at the beginning of the Victorian era.

Charles Ney, fifth Duke of Elchingen, lately invalided from the front, and now recovering from his wounds at the Villa Massena at Nice, is a captain of artillery, who before resuming service with his guns spent several months acting as chauffeur to Gen. Joffre, a task so arduous, and above all so risky, owing to the speed at which Joffre insists upon traveling, that most of the old warrior's chauffeurs after a few weeks' duty at the wheel express their preference for work in even the most advanced and exposed of the trenches.

It is not that they are alarmed about their own safety when driving him, but they realize that if any accident were to happen to him, and were he to be placed hors de combat through any wreck of the motor, it is they who would be held responsible by the entire army.

The Duke of Elchingen is a great-grandson of the most famous of all the first Napoleon's marshals—namely, Michel Ney, surnamed by the great emperor "the bravest of the brave," and who, after a trial by court martial, is alleged to have been executed in Paris by a file of French soldiers some weeks after the battle of Waterloo, his death warrant being signed by Louis XVIII.

The marshal's eldest son married the daughter of the banker, Jacques Lafitte, and after serving for a time as aid-de-camp to the late Duke of Orleans, died, leaving a daughter, who became the wife of the Duc de Persigny, one of the chief ministers of Napoleon III., and a son, Michel Ney.

The present Duke of Elchingen and his elder brother, Prince de la Moskowa, are his sons, and their mother, after becoming the widow of their father, married as her second husband Victor Massena, Prince of Essling and Duke of Rivoli, himself a grandson of Marshal Massena, another of the great commanders of the first Napoleon.

CONTROLLING MALARIA.

TO rid the United States completely of malaria should not prove difficult or expensive. Nothing is more interesting than the relation of malaria to Grecian and Roman civilization. In certain ages Greece has been free from malaria. In other ages malaria has blighted Grecian civilization. Malaria saved Rome from extinction by the northern savages. The disease which had protected it from the invaders well nigh wiped out Rome. And yet thrice in history has that city been freed from malaria. The indications are that the fourth deliverance will be accomplished within a decade. Scotland was saved from the Gauls by malaria. This disease paralyzed the invading armies. Yet Scotland has been freed from malaria.

More than one European expedition against Mexico was routed by malaria while in Vera Cruz or between it and the city. Our army of occupation in 1915 was in a fair way to rid Vera Cruz of malaria.

At the time of Sydenham London was a dangerous malaria fever spot. In the latter part of the eighteenth century many parts of Germany were infected with malignant malaria. Hirsch says: "In many parts of Europe and North America malaria has become of recent years not only less frequent than in the preceding century but also less severe in type."

The medical history of the Canal Zone shows what can be done in controlling malaria. Probably no part of the world was worse infected with malaria twenty years ago than the Canal Zone. Being the meeting place for commerce to and from all tropical America, a great many men with latent and acute malaria were always gathered there. Mosquitoes capable of carrying malaria bred on the zone at all seasons of the year. In the earlier years of the American occupation there was an abundance of malaria. In August, 1906, 10.6 per cent of the entire working force were in the hospital sick with malaria—one workman out of every nine. The record for 1905 was almost as bad. In August, 1915, seven-tenths of 1 per cent of the working force were in the hospital sick from malaria—one out of every 143.

The annual report for 1915 says: "With regard to malaria, which is our principal cause of disability, the admission rate, hospital and quarters, was 51.20, as compared with 81.52 in 1914, a reduction of 37 per cent in the latter year. (The rate in 1906 was 821.) There has been a reduction of 38 per cent in the malaria death rate since 1913. (The reduction since 1906 has been from 48.37 to .23 in 1915.) In 1915 two whites and six blacks died of this disease.

"In my opinion all the permanent towns for employés in the Canal Zone are now practically free from endemic malaria except Cristobal, Colon, and Gatun, and these towns will be free of it when the improvements planned are completed."

But we do not need to go outside of the limits of the United States to find proof that malaria is on the wane. Hirsch wrote his Handbook of Geographical Pathology in 1881. In this book we find the following statements: "In the prairie states proper, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, malarial fevers are likewise widely prevalent, diminishing toward the northwest. Thus in the northern parts of Iowa the disease is no longer so common. . . . It is in the southern parts of the state of Michigan that we come upon the true domain of malaria, and we then follow it along both shores of Lake St. Clair and along the southern shores of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

"In Pennsylvania the disease has retired from places that used to be its headquarters, such as the country bordering the Schuylkill, the Susquehanna, and the Delaware. In New Jersey there has also been a remarkable decrease of malarial fevers within recent years in many localities that used to be visited by it severely.

"In the New England states malarial fever is endemic at only a few points; in the state of Maine it is no longer endemic."

This quotation gives an idea of the distribution of the disease in 1881. In 1915 Dr. von Ezdorf investigated the prevalence of malaria in the United States. In the following states the disease is of little importance, as indicated by reports of the state health departments: Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. While the following states were generally free from the disease, there was some of it in certain districts: California, Illinois, and Indiana.

Dr. Dixon of Pennsylvania says that the great influx of Italians into Pennsylvania has served to reinfect parts of that state, and yet since malaria was made notifiable [in 1906] and the policy of placarding houses in which there is malaria, the diagnosis of malaria is not so commonly made and the mild types of typhoid fever are reported as typhoid.

There is no malaria now in northern Illinois and northern Indiana, and if the Dixon policy prevailed in these states there would be but little malaria reported from their southern counties. And yet a generation ago the malaria of the Wabash was of nation-wide reputation.

The report from Michigan reads: "Twenty-five years ago malaria was a common ailment in Michigan, but the state is now comparatively free from the disease."

From Oregon comes the statement: "Malaria is reported to have been more or less prevalent many years ago."

In no one of the above states has any particular effort been made to stamp out the disease. The improvement shows the natural tendency of the disease to disappear under conditions that prevail in the United States. A disease which is dwindling away of itself cannot be difficult of control.

Ross, in his classical work on the prevention of malaria, gives five conditions necessary for the continuance of malaria in a community.

1. A person or persons with a sufficient number of malarial organisms in the stage in which malarial organisms can infect mosquitoes.
2. There must be anopheline mosquitoes, and these must suck enough blood from infected persons.
3. The infected mosquitoes must live a week or longer.
4. The infected mosquitoes must then succeed in biting a susceptible person.
5. Few or no infections will occur unless the persons infected with malaria are sufficiently numerous.

Unless all five of these conditions are met, if there is a break in the chain at any point, malaria tends to die out.

The more the facts are analyzed the greater the tendency to spontaneous disappearance of malaria. To begin with, it is not impossible to eradicate mosquitoes. Many places formerly mosquito infested have been freed from the pest. But only a few varieties of mosquitoes carry malaria, and those are not the most difficult to eradicate. For the continuance of malaria Roes estimates that there must be forty anopheleine mosquitoes to the person. If there are fewer, the disease tends to disappear.

Mosquitoes are inactive in the winter. It has been found in Mississippi that the mosquitoes manage to keep alive through the winter by hiding under the houses. But they do not bite in winter. Neither are they infected with malaria. It has been found in Louisiana that mosquitoes do not carry malaria until after May 15. It is easy, therefore, to break the mosquito link. It is broken every winter. The mosquitoes are reinfected in the spring.

When an anopheline mosquito sucks blood from a man infected with malaria she does not become infected unless she draws into her body at least two malarial parasites in the sexual stages. After these organisms get into her body a week at least passes before they have changed to a form which can pass from a mosquito to a person and infect him. After the expiration of a week the mosquito must find a susceptible person and bite him.

Ross gives the following to illustrate the tendency of malaria to spontaneously disappear. Into a village of 1,000 susceptible persons there comes one person with crescent organisms in his blood. There is one female anopheline mosquito in that village. Not every mosquito succeeds in sucking blood. The chance is 1 to 1 that this mosquito will not succeed. As there are a thousand well persons and one malarial person, the chance is 4,000 to 1 against the mosquito biting the malarial person. The chances are 8 to 1 against the mosquito living a week after biting the infectious party—12,000 to 1 that the mosquito will not travel this far toward infecting anybody. If she lives a week the chances are 4 to 1 that she will not bite a susceptible person.

Summarizing: Under the conditions set forth in this example, the chances are 48,000 to 1 that the disease will not spread beyond the man who came in infected.

In malaria there is a spontaneous tendency toward health. Ross holds that if 1,000 people are infected with malaria and no reinfection is allowed to occur in three months 500 of them will have recovered; in six months, 750; in nine months, 870; in twelve months, 938.

"Another estimate is that of 1,000 people infected but not reinfected, with no treatment in four months, 250 will remain infected; 62 will remain after eight months, and only 15 after twelve months.

When a mosquito injects a malarial parasite into human blood the parasite multiplies rapidly. If 1,000 parasites enter the blood there would be 10,000 there on the second day; 100,000 on the fourth day; 1,000,000 on the sixth day; 10,000,000 on the eighth day; 100,000,000 the tenth day, and 1,000,000,000 the twelfth day. A man will not have chills and fever until the number of parasites in his blood passes fifteen millions. When the number is less than that the man may not feel first class, but he does not have fever.

But the asexual parasites which cause fever cannot infect mosquitoes. The sexual stage parasites begin to appear in the blood about one week after the infection. They do not exist in large numbers until after the fever has lasted for some time. A mosquito sucks very little blood. A man's blood must carry a considerable number of parasites in the sexual stage before there is any likelihood that it will infect mosquitoes.

These are some of the reasons why malaria campaigns have succeeded in the past and will succeed in the future.

And what are the activities in a malaria campaign?

First, to prevent anopheline mosquitoes from breeding. The methods for accomplishing this require a separate paper. While total suppression is desirable, it is not necessary. Whenever the number of malaria mosquitoes is held below a certain level malaria tends to disappear.

Second, measures to prevent people from being bitten by mosquitoes. This applies especially to people infected with malaria. But in order to get rid of malaria it is not necessary to rid a country of malaria mosquitoes. Anopheline mosquitoes abound in the Calumet marshes, all over northern Illinois, northern Indiana, and southern Michigan, but there is no malaria. The mosquitoes are not infected.

Ross, in discussing the extermination of mosquitoes, says: "It is easier to render the mosquitoes inoffensive. In many parts of the world anopheles are always present and nevertheless malaria has disappeared or has become or tends to become attenuated."

Third, people capable of infecting mosquitoes must be (a) protected from mosquitoes. (b) Completely cured. During the mosquito season people with the sexual forms of the parasites in their blood should be kept behind screens. The still more important part of a program is to treat until completely cured all who have the disease. Quinine should be given at once when the attack shows itself and it should be continued until the blood contains no parasites. To stop quinine because the fever has stopped is to beget trouble. Three weeks of quinine is short enough. Six weeks is much better judgment. In my opinion the strategic time to strike is in winter. A complete examination of a population and thorough examination of all infected persons during December, January, and February would not be expensive or otherwise impractical. Edwards says: "During the winter man, not the mosquito, perpetuates the disease."

Fourth, giving of prophylactic doses (small) of quinine to all susceptible people in malarial districts from June to October. Ross says: "Malaria can always be greatly reduced, even be extirpated, in any locality. The cost is likely to be more than recouped by saving in life, labor, invaliding, medical attendance, and hospital accommodation." Says Howard, in Farmers' Bulletin 450: "Malaria is not a difficult disease to fight. This has been shown in many parts of the world."

MAKING PROVISION FOR STUDY OF GERMAN.

Chicago, April 3.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Please find out why the children of the James A. Sexton school who wished to study German are not doing so.

Last fall they brought home blanks for the parents to fill out, signifying their desire to have the children learn German. This was done, with no result.

In January of this year they brought home duplicate blanks for the same purpose. This was done again, with like results—namely: none. ROSE STERN,

The supervisor of German has visited the school and I am informed that provision will be made for the study of German in that school at an early date. JOHN D. SHOOP,

OWNER WILL BE PROSECUTED.

Chicago, April 2.—[To the Friend of the People.]—The hallways of the second and third floors of the building located at 1426 West Congress street are never lighted. I have reported the same twice in the last three months, but nothing has been done in the matter. Please see what can be done toward having the hallways lighted. THOMAS SCANLAN, 1426 West Congress street.

Notice was served on owner to provide lights within a reasonable time. He failed to do so; therefore recommendation was made to the city prosecutor to start suit against him for failure to provide lights as required by city ordinance. J. C. McDONNELL,
Chief Bureau of Fire Prevention and Public Safety.

GRANTING OF DIVORCE DECREE.

Chicago, April 3.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—[1] Does a divorce decree date from the time of decision in court or from signing of papers by the judge? [2] Can the judge change the decision before signing papers after having granted divorce in court? [3] How much time usually passes before the final papers are signed? [4] After divorce can the guilty party remarry in the state before two years, or one? C. F. E.

1. A divorce decree dates from the signing of the decree by the judge and not from the date of the hearing in court.
2. A judge has the right to alter his opinion at any time within the term of court at which the decree was signed.
3. Usually not more than ten days elapse between the hearing and the signing of the decree.
4. In Illinois the guilty party may not marry until the expiration of a year from the date of divorce, except in the case of adultery, in which case the guilty party cannot marry in two years.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

TO ADOPT NAME.

Chicago, April 2.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—What steps are necessary to have legal right to name taken nine years ago when deserted by father? What is cost of proceedings, if any? R. A. S.

The only way legally to adopt a name different from your real name is by a petition filed in the Circuit court.

Voting under your assumed name does not have been known by for some length of time will not invalidate your vote. The same is true of your marriage.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

MAKING ONE'S WILL.

Chicago, April 3.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Please advise as to a person may draft his or her will with safety, making such provisions as they desire carried out, and will such be legal. How many witnesses are necessary to a will? E. C. P.

It is always safer to have a competent attorney draw one's will than to attempt it alone. In fact, a large percentage of the will entanglements arise because of the attempt on the part of one not a lawyer to draw his or her own will. However, the mere fact that one draws up one's own will does not of itself necessarily make the will illegal. Every will must be properly attested by two disinterested witnesses who must sign their names to the document.

DOMESTIC TRANQUILLITY AND DEFENSE.

Chicago, April 3.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I am wondering how, with 42,000 miles of railroads in the hands of receivers and as many more miles bumping on the rocks, they are going to meet the proposed increase in wages to their train and engine men of $100,000,000 per year, with a consequent primer for as much more for unorganized labor, in view of a recent expression of the interstate commerce commission, reading as follows:

"Railroad labor, certainly organized railroad labor, is probably as well paid, and some say better paid, than labor of other kinds, upon the average.

"Railroad employés will hardly expect to receive wages which exceed those paid to other forms of labor for the same grade of service, and this commission certainly could not permit a change of rates for the purpose of enabling railroads to pay their laborers extravagant compensation as measured by the general average of compensation paid labor in this country as a whole."

Recently in the house two resolutions were proposed to exempt organized labor from national discipline, should it desire at any time to destroy lives or property or interfere with the mails and interstate transportation. Ought we not to give our attention to domestic tranquillity before we provide for the common defense?

German efficiency is founded on equality before the law; their form of government seems to insure this, no matter what its other defects may be. With us the tendency seems to be to depart from this essential. How long can we preserve our unity if we exempt one class of our people from observing those laws and obligations which are binding upon others? A READER.

HIS PROBABLE MEANING.

Farmingdale, S. D., April 4.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—President Wilson is reported as having in a recent speech thanked God that "no one man" could precipitate this nation into war, and I am wondering if it isn't possible that he was misquoted. What he really intended to thank God for, seemingly, was that only one man held that power, the head of the only "one man government" on earth, or at least it looks that way from this distance. A. D. LEE.

COMPARISON OF LIGHTING RATES.

Chicago, April 6.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—In a letter bearing the name of A. E. Goold and published in your paper the rates of the Commonwealth Edison company are criticized as comparing unfavorably with those of the municipal electric lighting and water plant of Holland, Mich. In Holland the current is transmitted entirely by overhead wires. In Chicago the company must do this by means of underground wires, adding immaterially to the expense. The comparison should not be between a city of [illegible] inhabitants, but with Boston, New York, or Philadelphia.

It is said that the smallest consumers in Holland get their electricity for 6 cents a kilowatt hour. In Chicago the Commonwealth Edison company's average kilowatt hour income from all lighting customers in 1915 was 5.01 cents. The average rate received from a six room apartment is about 7¾ cents. The figure of 11 cents for Chicago which Mr. Goold compares with 6 cents for Holland is the highest rate which a customer who does not settle promptly can be required to pay, and should not be used for purposes of comparison without this explanation. The net maximum rate in Chicago is 10 cents, and nearly all electric light customers earn a lower rate.

The power rate in Holland is said to be one-seventh of a cent per kilowatt hour. It is difficult to conceive of electricity being produced in a small municipal steam driven plant at that price. The wholesale rates in Chicago run down to 1 cent or less.

By law, the rates of the Chicago company must have the approval of the state public utilities commission of Illinois.

As to the bookkeeping of the Holland plant it may be possible that the charges for depreciation, loss of taxes, insurance, water used, etc., are insufficient or lacking. Or the waterworks part of the plant may possibly bear a portion of the municipal expense.

The Commonwealth Edison company paid out 7½ per cent of its operating revenue in 1915 for taxes and municipal compensation. And then, too, if the company is privately owned it is certainly a home owned institution. It has about 3,000 stockholders, of whom about 90 per cent (owning 80 per cent of the stock) are residents of Chicago. That is a pretty effective form of municipal ownership in itself. WILLIAM E. KNOX.

THE IDIOTIC WAR

By Edward Goldbeck

TO speak about war, to hear about war, has become tiresome. War has been almost the only topic of the last twenty months, and even when we forced ourselves to get away from the obsession, the leitmotif was humming in our subconsciousness. So I would certainly prefer to treat a more pleasant subject, but I cannot follow my own inclination, for who knows how long free discussion will still be possible? When a nation decides for common action, the individual has but little chance of being heard. As the next hour may bring the grave decision, in fulfillment of an urgent duty I shall have to speak about war again.

The Washington papers inform us that Col. House has arrived from New York. "It become known tonight that the executive and his chief unofficial adviser are considering important phases of the international situation." So we may expect momentous resolutions from the part of the president and his influential but irresponsibe friend. Political twilight-existences, as that of Mr. Edward M. House, have always been considered as corollaries of an autocratic system.

Autocrats who every now and then found their opinions and intentions contradicted or thwarted by their official advisers preferred the intercourse with favorites of both sexes. William II. conferred his friendship on Count Philipp Eulenburg and availed himself of the diplomatic services of the Prince of Monaco. President Wilson sent Mr. Lind to Mexico; to judge by Mr. Wilson's Mexican policy, the reports of this first unofficial adviser must have been about as true to reality as the portrait of a cubist to his models. Then he dispatched Col. House to Europe. The result of such would-be autocratic measures is dissatisfaction of the men who were nominated to do the work and are responsible for it. They resent these special missions as a proof of distrust.

Moreover, negotiations are embroiled by the fact that two men, the ambassador and the extraordinary envoy, speak to the foreign official about the same matter. The ambassador: "I can assure your excellency that my government will not give in about this point, because . . ." The foreign official, smiling amiably: "I am afraid you are not well informed; maybe your instructions are on the way, but I know from a reliable source . . ." The ambassador becomes embarrassed; he wonders if the unofficial adviser might have ceded on that point. The result is disorganization of the service. But this is a side issue; the main thing is that the colonel has been at the White House and something is going to happen.

If we lived in a real autocracy, this outlook would not be so frightful. Autocrats mostly have a very keen understanding of the actual conditions, and neither Richelieu nor Louis XIV. governed against public opinion.

But we live in a pedantocracy and so it is possible that we may have a war about a question which can interest only pedants. We may have an idiotic war. Mr. Ballin, the head of the Hamburg-American line, one of Germany's shrewdest business men, is reported to have called the present war idiotic. If one syllable in the "Iliad" should be personified it would perhaps be able to find out the meaning of the word and of the line it is a part of, but it would hardly be ingenious enough to understand the idea of the entire poem. In a century the meaning of the present war, which is obscure to us, may be clear to every freshman.

With much better reason a war between the United States and Germany might be called not only frivolous and criminal but idiotic. There is no reason whatever for such a war. The question whether a merchantman is armed for defensive only or for offensive, too, and whether Americans may exert the right to travel on such ships is not apt to inflame the blood of the average American. Only a pedant could think of such a matter as a sufficient issue for war or peace. Mr. Wilson and his adherents may shout at the top of their lungs that American honor is at stake; they will deceive nobody to whom the question is put, unobscured by grandiloquent phrases. Moreover, a war is not a duel. Nations are not fighting for "honor." They never did and hardly ever will.

A war is a tremendous military, political, financial industrial enterprise, and before we decide for it we must know what we might get out of it. Prussia knew what she would get out of the war of 1866. Germany knew what the war of 1870 would lead her to. The northern states knew what they were fighting for in the civil war. A war is only justified if it ends an unbearable situation and prepares for a better future. That is why intervention in Mexico is desirable and a war against Germany—or any other European power—is undesirable.

The United States cannot get anything out of a war with Germany. The money and the blood would be wasted. Of course, there are people who indulge in hollow phraseology and want the United States to "join the western democracies which stand for liberty and self-government." Waiving the fact that France does not stand for self-government, but for the most rigid centralisation, that it is a democracy on the surface and essentially a financial oligarchy; waiving the fact that in England "the national government is still mainly in the hands of the upper class" (A. L. Lqwell, "The Government of England"), America has no business to entangle herself in this European quarrel for Quixotic reasons.

THERE are some people who think that America would not feel the war very much. Sir Edward Grey said the same about England before the war began, and he will admit now that he was sortily mistaken. I even think that a mistake like that ought to make a man impossible as a leader. It is one of the greatest merits of The Chicago Daily Tribune that its editorials emphasized again and again that the United States in case of war cannot fight with silver bullets only. An attempt of this kind would make America lose caste for a long time. It would probably be disgusting to the majority of the Americans themselves.

While I am writing this I read that President Wilson would be too proud to fight; he would only put an embargo on foodstuffs destined to reach the central powers. This scheme would certainly be educational, but it would be an education in cowardice, the exact reverse of what this country most needs at this moment.

The idea of an alliance with England seems to lurk in the background. Such an alliance would be repudiated on account of the German-American and Irish-American population. Of course, if it could be proved to the German-Americans that the alliance was beneficent and necessary, they would be patriotic enough to submit to it, but this proof is impossible. There is not the slighest reason why the United States should enmesh itself in the system of coalitions. We are strong enough to stand alone and to remember Ibsen's word: "The strongest man is he who stands alone." We have the men, we have the money, and the spirit will be created. It is even better that we should have no allies, as then we would probably rely on them instead of relying on ourselves. Let us keep away from the nightmare of coalitions. (Count Schuwaloff said to Bismarck once: "Vous avez le cauchemar des coalitions.")

The system of coalitions brought the present war upon Europe. It began in Serbia. When the Austrian archduke and heir to the throne had been assassinated, Austria sent imperious and humiliating demands to Serbia. Serbia would have accepted them, but she knew that Russia would stand by her, as Russia considers herself the traditional protector of the Christian Slav nations in the Balkans. So she sued for assistance in Petrograd and Russia mobilised to help Serbia.

Then France saw that here was the opportunity of regaining Alsace-Lorraine. But her leaders might have hesitated if she had not lent about twenty billions to Russia, part of the sum on the explicit condition that it would be spent on strategic railroads and armaments. How desert an ally for whom she had done so much? So France mobilized. William II. said to himself: "If now I allow Austria to be humiliated by a European conference, she will go over to the other side (as Edward VII. suggested to Francis Joseph in 1908) and we shall have war in a year or so under much more aggravating circumstances." So he decided to draw the sword. And Sir Edward Grey felt that, after all the diplomatic conversations and military conventions with France and Russia, England was bound to fight.

None of all the leaders and rulers wanted war, not even Edward VII., the inventor of the system. Europe drifted into war in spite of the fact that every intelligent man in England and Germany saw the disaster approaching. Statesmen and diplomats tried to find a formula of conciliation, but the force of circumstances was stronger than human intelligence and good will.

THAT is why America ought to keep out of this mess. Let us try to prepare for all emergencies and avoid war so long as the interest and the dignity of the American nation allow it. Can any one really doubt that Germany is anxious to remain on friendly terms with the United States?

There is still another point of view. Neither is Germany eager to annihilate England, nor is England eager to annihilate Germany. Mr. Lissauer in Germany and Mr. Kipling in England are doting. The annihilation of England would mean that Germany would be edged in between Slavs and Latins, a highly undesirable condition. The annihilation of Germany would mean the hegomony of Russia in Europe, a consideration which England would find most annoying. It is not improbable at all that Germany and England will come to an understanding when the war is over. This is one reason more why it would be "idiotic" for the United States to force a conflict with Germany. Unprepared as the nation is, she ought not to fight for a phantom.

COL. E. M. HOUSE.

GOSSIP

by Robert Herrick

FEW men have ever had their private character so thoroughly investigated as has Mr. Louis Brandeis, the Boston lawyer whose nomination for the Supreme court of the United States the president lightly tossed into the senate before departing for his round of speech making last January. Probably the president was quite well aware of the commotion his selection would cause and may have taken a malicious pleasure in thus giving the senators something nonpolitical to chatter about during his absence; also quite probably he had already made up his mind as to the utter worthlessness of all the charges against Mr. Brandeis which have been going the rounds for a dozen years and more and have culminated in the exhibition of petty spite and credulous gossip that has been given before the senate subcommittee in charge of the examination of Mr. Brandeis' record. Possibly he had already satisfied himself when he considered Mr. Brandeis for his cabinet three years ago that these charges had no foundation whatever in fact and was glad to take this opportunity of vindicating an able and public spirited citizen, who has suffered more than most men for his ability and public spirit at the hands of our "leading citizens."

I am not in the least qualified to speak of Mr. Brandeis' fitness for the high position of a judge of the Supreme court of the United States. Perhaps he is too partisan by temperament to make the best kind of judge: he has had occasion the last twenty years to develop all the fighting blood in him. As for the dangers from his radical mind, very likely an entire bench of Brandeises might be a bad thing, but one social radical in that conservative group of elderly gentlemen might serve as a useful irritant, might suggest to the Supreme court, which has become the real law creating body of our government, that the world do move these days.

THE Brandeis case interests me as an illustration of a pestilential social disease, only too prevalent in our country. Mr. Brandeis is an able lawyer—even his enemies admit that—one of the ablest in the country.

He has had a large practice in Boston, and so long as he devoted himself to the lucrative practice of his profession, which meant using his talents in corporation business, he enjoyed repute and favor in conservative Boston. It was only when he began to question the ethics of business and to interest himself in something other than the making of money that he became gradually suspect to his former associates. "He who is not for me is against me" is as true of business as of other matters.

When Mr. Brandeis fought the methods of a notorious trust, which earlier in his career he had served as counsel and director, when he stirred up the rotten pool of New Haven finance, he became straightway enemy and traitor to society. It did not matter that he was right in his contentions, legally and morally; he had dared to question the methods of that society which had accepted him and trusted him with its affairs. It was inconceivable to the financiers, lawyers, and business men whose interests he opposed that any one could have but one motive for attacking their properties—money.

Therefore Mr. Brandeis had been "bought," or he was "selling New Haven short" in the stock market while wrecking the railroad by his exposures. (What he exposed of the condition of New Haven affairs ultimately proved to be less than the real truth, but, of course, it was Brandeis and his allies that wrecked the road, not the bankers and leeches who had made fat profits from it.)

It is needless to add that not one scintilla of proof has been brought forward that Mr. Brandeis ever profited directly or indirectly from his attack on the New Haven. He seems to have been motived in these matters by public spirit and also by a purely intellectual interest in demonstrating the truth—both of which motives are inconceivable in the psychology of big business.

It is not worth while going over all the charges made against Mr. Brandeis, which have recently been fully aired before the subcommittee of the senate. Nothing is deader than stale falsehood, and that is what the charges have simmered down to. The animus of some of the eminent citizens who appeared against Mr. Brandeis is obvious, but hardly creditable. It is no wonder, for instance, that neither ex-President Taft nor his attorney general, Mr. Wickersham, like Mr. Brandeis, for he caught one in suppression of evidence in a public affair and the other in misdating an important document in order to convey a wrong impression.

LOUIS BRANDEIS.

It would have been in better taste if the ex-president and his pliant attorney general had kept out of this general attack upon Mr. Brandeis' character, but they evidently considered the chances favorable, not merely of "saving face" in the Ballinger scandal, but of getting even with the clever lawyer who had divined their tricky manipulation of public documents. Also, it is clear enough why the gentlemen who felt themselves aggrieved in the United Shoe Machinery case and in the collapse of the New Haven railroad should take this occasion of punishing their tormentor. But why such men as ex-Ambassador Choate and President Lowell of Harvard university should feel obliged to use their influence against Mr. Brandeis is less easy to understand.

THESE gentlemen and many others who voluntarily testified against Mr. Brandeis have never been personally concerned in the cases in which his conduct has supposedly been "unprofessional." They know nothing personally of their own experience: their evidence against the man is prejudice, impression—in a word, gossip. They have long associated with men whose dislike of Brandeis found ample expression in unfavorable stories and insinuations of misconduct and almost unconsciously they have assimilated this hostile atmosphere and accepted the repeated charges as proved fact. That, alas, is what we all do every day of our lives.

Somebody tells us a tale about somebody else, which, even if faithfully reported, may be based on still a third person's misapprehension of fact, but without effort to verify the statements made we accept it and most likely hand it on with imaginative embroidery of our own. I remember very well the earnest and honest minded young lawyer who first gave me the "inside facts" of one of the Brandeis stories. I have no doubt that he did his best to represent the matter fairly, but he had had the circumstances from persons who were prejudiced against the Boston lawyer, who, perhaps, had lost money on the other side. It was not until years afterward that I learned one little fact which put an entirely different and perfectly honorable light on Mr. Brandeis' action in this affair.

Knowing human nature, I assume that the wide prejudice against Mr. Brandeis has little better foundation in reasonable cause than the above which happened to me. It is not only women who gossip, who love to pick up stories about human character and repeat them undiminished in virulence. Wherever men congregate, in their clubs and at their dinner tables, one may hear from male lips the same hateful stream of gossip that is supposed to characterise solely gatherings of women.

We are told that the best test of reputation is the opinion of one's associates, that if the community in which a man has lived and worked reports unfavorably on his character, there is strong grounds for suspecting him. That axiom, like so many rule of thumb notions, according to which we run our lives, seems to be false. I should want to know the character of the community before accepting its verdict about any one, and in some communities I should consider the best certificate of character the fact that public opinion was against me! To have made many enemies among "leading citizens" may mean nothing more than that one is both independent and fearless, not to be controlled by property or social influences. Mr. Brandeis' garland of enemies may well be his laurel wreath of character.

VERY wisely Mr. Brandeis has not tried to vindicate himself. So far as I know he has wasted no time explaining himself and refuting lies about his actions. He has gone his own somewhat solitary way, devoting his fine talents to real matters, usually of public concern, content with the unshaken faith of a few friends, who know and understand, and with the interest he has in his work. He is one of the very few men in our country of eminent ability who apparently prefer to use their talents for the public rather than in amassing a private fortune. His mind is of that unusual temper which loves mental exercise for its own sake as well as for the good it can accomplish. What the Boston Brahmins or the New York bankers may think or say about him has probably worried him very little. And the gossip of clubs and dinner tables still less. His is not the character that depends on the uncertain opinions of men for comfort and satisfaction.

The belief in Washington seems to be that, all the charges having fallen flat, Mr. Brandeis will be confirmed by the senate and become a Supreme court judge. I hope so. I do not care so much for his special qualifications for the position as for the justice now tardily being rendered a man much maligned by gossip of a peculiarly nasty and detestable kind, men's gossip. It is the triumph of a self-contained high-minded man, who for many years has dared to go about the public's business, undisturbed by malicious lies, by the fog of misconceptions created through gossip.

It is a pity that such discouragements are usually offered those who try to serve the public in the highly useful way that Mr. Brandeis has. It is a greater pity that we condemn ourselves to live in such a fog of misunderstandings and falsehoods, that we breathe gossip all our waking moments and base our judgments of men on its false assumptions. The only safe way is to believe nothing against man or woman except what our own intelligence and knowledge of the facts may corroborate. And conversely to do as Mr. Brandeis has done—ignore the gossip about ourselves so long as we know that it has no basis in fact. Reputation is perhaps the largest illusion in an illusory world.

FRENCH PEASANTS AND WAR

By Alphonse Aulard

M. Aulard is professor of history of the French revolution in the University of Paris and author of the "Histoire Politique de la Revolution Francaise." He has made a career out of the defense of the tradition of the French revolution against the attacks of the reaction, notably of Taine. Since the opening of the war he has had a calming influence on the more violent French opinion and has done much by his articles in Paris newspapers to soothe useless, wasteful hatred and to direct French energy into more effective channels. He has stimulated the courage of citizens by bluntly telling them the truth about the military and diplomatic situation. Mr. Aulard is widely known to American history students for his conviction that the French revolution came from America to France. He is an admirer of the United States and of Americans, whom he regards as the pure, uncorrupted liberals of the earth.

I DO not think that it is possible to understand how France can support so long and so hard a war as the present conflict with such firmness and with no manifestation of lassitude or exhaustion without taking into account the state of mind and the moral and material condition of the French peasantry.

French peasants have changed a great deal since the Franco-German war of 1870-1871; a foreigner who had not traveled in France during these forty-five years would not recognize them if he should return now.

In 1870 the peasants of many regions were characterized by the most profound ignorance. In some parts of the country they were still of an almost barbarian degree of naïveté. Thus, in June or July of 1870, some Perigord peasants, believing on the basis of some absurd rumor or other that a wealthy country gentleman who lived among them had conspired to establish the old order, with feudal rights, etc., actually burned this landlord slowly to death with a green wood fire. Naturally not all French peasants were then in this state of savagery, but nevertheless there were occasional incidents of this kind, which did indicate a general condition of peasant ignorance.

Similarly, when Gambetta tried to improvise armies composed chiefly of rural elements he found that he could not obtain from these ignorant peasants the necessary degree of intelligent discipline and solid organization. For this reason Gambetta's armies were generally only heroic mobs, all the more so because the peasants had no particular notion of what France was, so that there was no force of conscious, reasoned patriotism to support them in the terrible trials which they were to endure.

Free education, obligatory and religiously neutral, has gradually, but on the whole rapidly, brought the French peasantry out of ignorance. Today in all parts of the country, except a few tardy provinces, most peasants can read and write. The republic's normal schools have turned out for them first rate teachers of admirable zeal, capable of furnishing them with all the ideas useful to a free man and a citizen. Extending their thoughts beyond the narrow horizon dominated by the village steeple French peasants have come to understand that their little countrysides are only units in the great French patrie. The peasant has become a patriot.

It is not alone to the primary school that the credit for this result is due; the children do not remain there long enough. The institutions which we call by a term resembling that used to describe your "extension" organizations have played a great part. The evening lessons given by schoolmasters to grown people, the friendly individual talks between teachers and former pupils, the general moral influence of the schoolmaster in the village—often of almost preponderant authority—have contributed to the general work of education.

Newspapers have also been a successful medium of peasant education. For the last twenty-five years they have been spreading throughout the country, penetrating even to the most secluded districts. If all the peasants do not read them themselves there is scarcely a family where one member does not do so, and from him the others learn the essential substance of the news.

Such newspapers as the Petit Parisien and the Petit Journal of the Paris press and the Depeche de Toulouse and the Petit Marseillais of the provincial press are excellent educators of the people by virtue of their distribution in an attractive, clear, elementary form of historical, scientific, moral, geographical, and literary knowledge. They have certainly served to enlighten and to render finer the rude good sense of the French peasant.

It must also be borne in mind that the economic condition of the peasantry was immensely improved during the same period that primary education was spreading, and the peasants became happier in the measure that they acquired more education. They came out of the economic slavery of poverty at the same time as they emerged from the bondage of ignorance.

Rapid and colorless as is my exposition of the mental condition of the French peasantry, it nevertheless may serve to account for the fact that the basis of the present French armies, seven-tenths peasant as they are, is so much more soldier than was that of Gambetta's armies, though the present armies, at least as regards the very numerous latest recruits, have been improvised to almost the same degree that Gambetta's troops were. It is for these reasons of social development that we have now such an intelligent and heroic discipline in all our armies, such an enlightened and ardent patriotism, for now every peasant knows that in defending France he is defending his village, his family, and his property.

In our present armies, whose former officers have almost entirely disappeared under the wear of war, it has been found easy to secure new officers from the educated individuals among the simple privates. The school teachers have here been of great importance. Promoted to be noncommissioned officers and lieutenants, they have showed ability to command as well as heroism and good spirit. Led in battle by the schoolmaster in whom he has so much confidence, the French peasant is the stanchest of soldiers.

Besides, his spirit is kept up by the knowledge that during his absence his family is being looked after. He knows that his relatives are not suffering, even that they are not in any want. The government's allowance to soldiers' wives, varying as it does according to the number of children in the family, suffices amply, for life is very cheap in the country. There are some peasants, indeed, who have never found themselves in such good fortune as since the opening of the war.

IN the cities, where life is dear, workingmen's wives, on the other hand, are hard put to it. The result is that peasant women, who make up the majority of French women, do not complain very much of the war, do not lament too much on account of its length, and do not write discouraging letters to their husbands at the front. The workingmen's wives, in the towns, are more inclined to complain and to write discouragingly, but fortunately their husbands are even better educated than the peasants, so that they have an even stronger conviction of the absolute necessity of carrying through the war to a victorious end in order to preserve the very existence of France.

The gloomy letters of their wives, if they do get them at all, do not appear to have made more than a mediocre impression as yet. Further, workingmen of radical convictions, syndicalists who in time of peace were called men without a country because of a childish use of language, have shown themselves particularly ardent in the struggle against Prussian militarism.

To return to the question of peasants, it should be observed that agricultural labor has continued despite their mobilization, because the women, children, old people, and the nonmobilized civil population have kept at work. If the wheat crop was bad it was more due to bad weather than to lack of labor. Hay, potatoes, and beans have shown excellent crops. A sufficient amount of wheat has been imported and the price of the grain has been relatively low. Thus, in my country of the Charente, a sack of wheat weighing eighty kilograms is now worth from 24 to 25 francs, only 3 or 4 francs a sack more than before the war.

The higher prices paid to the peasants for live stock, for whose feeding they have had ample stocks, have made up for the loss on the wheat crop, for the government has commandeered very little live stock, heavy importations having made this measure unnecessary.

THE war is not causing any trouble to speak of to peasants, be they land owners or hired men, in so far as their material interests are concerned. Those who produce are selling at higher prices. Farm wages are twice as high as in peace time. It is only middle class property owners who are suffering materially from the war, and their moral strength is supported by a patriotism of a more enlightened degree than that of the peasants.

It is through the loss of men, above all, that the war is affecting the peasant class. Widely spread education has made the peasants more sensitive of spirit. They mourn their dead more bitterly than in the time of Napoleon, but this suffering, even among the women, is tempered by the spirit and habits of resignation acquired in their continual struggle with nature.

There are many other things which could be said of this subject, so little known to foreigners. But I trust that the little sketch which I have made here will make clear the reasons for the firmness of French public opinion during this long and cruel war.

PALACE.

Ralph Hers: Some time ago when I went into the movies the director had some doubts as to my ability. To prove that I was an actor I started reciting: "To be, or not to be, that is the question——"

"Cut that!" shouted the director. "That isn't the question at all. The question is: "How long can you stay under water."

Yes, I'm working in pictures now. I am in a new feature, "Bringing Home Father," in three reels.

Most comedians at some time or another express a desire to play "Hamlet." I am one of the exceptions. Never can I remember when I wanted to play "Hamlet." I played Oshkosh, and that was hamlet enough for me.

MAJESTIC.

Stuart Barnes—It is wonderful to see a young man in love. One night a week he gets a bouquet of flowers and goes to his girl's house. When he gets to the door his knees begin to wabble and when some one answers the ring he asks: "Is Miss Smith in?" Is she in? Why, for two hours she's been sitting looking out the window for the rubberhead to show up, and when he finally has arrived she sends some one else to let him in and say: "I'll see if she's in."

Then finally the poor goat is led into the front room and told to be seated, that Miss Smith will be down presently. And while Miss Smith is waiting for a sufficient time to elapse to give the lunkhead the idea that she is finishing her toilet all her little brothers and sisters pass by the door and gawk in at the big goof and make him more and more miserable. He's on view. He's sister's exhibit, and they all want a look at what she's caught.

Finally she comes and they talk; that is, she talks and he says, "O, yes," "Uh-huh," "Of course." She invites him to dinner because she wants pa and ma to et a close view of the poor fish, and he accepts.

He is so wabbly at the table that he puts butter on his salad and vinegar on his meat. Ma asks him if he will have tea or coffee and he answers "A little of both." In trying to use his handkerchief he takes hold of the table cloth and upsets everything on the table. When he has calmed down dinner is over and he tells them what a lively dinner he had and how much he enjoyed it.

Say what you will against women, statistics go to prove that half our parents have been women.

M'VICKER'S.

Will H. Fox: There's been a rumor going around that I was dead. But it was another fellow. I know it wasn't me the minute I heard about it. I think the report was spread by a couple of children. When I get married I ain't going to have any children. My mother didn't have any, either.

And here's another thing. I hate fresh street car conductors. The other day I got on a Madison street trolley car and I said to the conductor: "Can I go to State street without change?" He said: "No, you need a nickel." So I gave him a lead 5 cent piece. He said: "I can't accept that." I said: "Then give it to the company."

Last week I was in a butcher shop when an old maid came in and said to the butcher, "Is your steak tender?" He said: "Madam, it's as tender as a woman's heart." She said: "Then give me mutton chops."

Questions and Answers

Please publish the best route from Chicago to West Baden, Ind. What is the condition of the roads?

J. McD., J. H. Hibben, Chicago.

Your first objective point is Indianapolis, which you reach by way of South Chicago, Hammond, Schererville, Crown Point, Thayer, Rensselaer, Remington, Wolcott, Montmorenci, Lafayette, Frankfort, and Kirklin. This route to Indianapolis is good gravel, stone, and macadam, with the exception of a short stretch of sandy dirt this side of Rensselaer. The recommended route to West Baden from Indianapolis is by way of Franklin, Taylorsville, Columbus, Bedford, Orleans, and Paoli. The roads are of gravel and stone.

Will you kindly publish the best route from Ironwood to Ann Arbor, Mich., by way of Milwaukee and Chicago?

W. F. Olson, Ironwood, Mich.

Go first to Iron Mountain, Mich., From there travel via Norway, Powers, and Wallace to Menominee; thence to Green Bay, Manitowoc, Sheboygan Falls, and Port Washington to Milwaukee. From Milwaukee to Chicago via Racine, Kenosha, Waukegan, Lake Forest, Fort Sheridan, Glencoe, and Evanston. From Chicago go to South Bend via Hobart and La Porte, and from there motor to Ann Arbor on the main Chicago-Detroit road by way of Niles, Kalamazoo, Battle Creek, and Jackson.

What is the distance from Cleveland, O., to Milwaukee, Wis.? Through what towns do you drive? Are the roads macadam through Ohio and Indiana? Where can I get a map for the trip? P., Dodgeville, Wis.

The distance from Cleveland to Milwaukee is 473.8 miles. From Cleveland to Toledo, via Elyria, Oberlin, Norwalk, Bellevue, and Fremont, the roads are a combination of brick, asphalt, and macadam. You will encounter gravel and stone roads all the way from Toledo to South Bend, via Wauseon, Bryan, Ligonier, and Goshen. There are optional roads between South Bend and Chicago, one via Laporte, Valparaiso, and Hobart, and another via Michigan City. The former is a trifle shorter. The most direct route from Chicago to Milwaukee is by way of Evanston, Glencoe, Lake Forest, Waukegan, Kenosha, and Racine, and although there are some stretches yet to be improved, it is probably the best. You can get automobile road maps of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin of such stores as carry automobile supplies, but we would advise the purchase of a Blue Book for the trip.

What is the best automobile route from Harbor Springs, Mich., to Chicago?

Mrs. Grace F. Howes, Chicago.

Harbor Springs to Petoskey, via Wequetonsing, Roaring Brook, and Bay View Station; Petoskey to Traverse City, via Bayshore, Charlevoix, Eastport, Kewadin, and Elk Rapids; Traverse City to Cadillac, via Buckley, Sherman, and Manton; Cadillac to Grand Rapids, via Reed City, Big Rapids, Howard City, Sand Lake, and Rockford; Grand Rapids to Kalamazoo, via Moline, Wayland, Bradley, Martin, and Plainwell; Kalamazoo to South Bend, via Paw Paw, Dowagiac, and Niles; South Bend to Chicago, via Laporte, Valparaiso, and Hobart.

What is the best automobile route from Belvidere, Ill., to Clare, Mich., and where can I obtain a road map?

J. J. P., Belvidere, Ill.

Go to Chicago, via Garden Prairie, Marengo, Elgin, Addison, and Oak Park. From Chicago to South Bend, via Hobart, Valparaiso, and Laporte. South Bend to Kalamazoo via Niles, Dewagiac, and Paw Paw; from Kalamazoo to Battle Creek via Galesburg and Augusta; from Battle Creek to Lansing via Charlotte; from Battle Creek to Mount Pleasant via St. Johns and Ithaca. Clare is thirty miles north of Battle Creek. You can get automobile road maps of Illinois and Michigan from stores carrying automobile supplies.

How can I get into the racing game as a driver and who do I go and see?

D. D. D., Chicago.

You probably will have difficulty in securing a position as a racing driver, for at the present time there are more experienced drivers than there are cars in this country. You would have to serve an apprenticeship, both as a pitman and a mechanician, before you would be given a car to drive. If more factories were maintaining racing teams, you might secure a position with a company in its racing department and work up. Mercer, however, is the only company identified with racing at the present time, and its team is complete. The best advice that we can give you is to go to one of the big meets at New York, Chicago, or Indianapolis and make inquiries of drivers and team managers.

Will you give me the route from Rockford, Ill., to Canton, Ill.? Will I find better roads by going via Starved Rock or by traveling further west over the Cannonball trail?

Lloyd Todd, Rockford, Ill.

For your trip from Rockford to Canton, Ill., we would recommend that you go by way of Princeton rather than by way of La Salle, Varna, and Washington, as you probably will find the former route in better condition at this time of the year. If you follow the recommended route, you will pass through the following towns and cities: Milford, Rochelle, West Brooklyn, Mendota, Princeton, Mlo, Lawn Ridge, Peoria, Hanna, Trivoli, Farmington, and Norris.

Will you kindly inform me of the cities through which the Dixie highway passes from Chicago to Miami, outlining both the eastern and western branches of that highway in Kentucky?

M. L. Shaw, Edgerton, Wis.

The Dixie highway, from Chicago to Miami, passes through the following cities and towns: Chicago Heights, Momence, Wateeka, Hoopeston, and Danville, Ill.; Covington, Crawfordsville, Indianapolis, Bloomington, Paoli, Greenville, and New Albany, Ind.; Louisville, Elizabethtown, Munfordville, Cave City, Bowling Green, and Adairville, Ky.; Springfield, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Monteagle, Jasper, and Chattanooga, Tenn.; Dalton, Kineton, Rome, Marietta, Atlanta, Griffin, Forsyth, Macon, Americus, Albany, and Thomasville, Ga.; Tallahassee, Live Oak, Lake City, Jacksonville, St. Augustine, Daytona, Cocoa, Stuart, and Palm Beach, Fla. In Georgia there are two more direct routes between Macon and Jacksonville than that given above, one going by way of Waycross and the other via Savannah. The routing of the western branch of the Dixie highway through Kentucky is given above. The eastern branch of the road through the Blue Grass state starts at Covington and passes through Williamstown, Georgetown, Lexington, Richmond, Mount Vernon, London, Corbin, Barbourville, Pineville, and Middlesborough.

What is the best motor route from Ottawa, Ill., to Madison, S. D.? I prefer a good road first, then short mileage.

E. W. Dunn, Kinsman, Ill.

Your first objective point is Davenport, Ia., which you reach via La Salle, Princeton, Sheffield, Geneseo, and Moline. From Davenport to Omaha, travel either the river-to-river road [via Iowa City, Marengo, Grinnell, Newton, Colfax, Des Moines, Guthrie Center, Minden, and Weston] or the Great White Way [via Muscatine, Washington, Oskaloosa, Des Moines, Stuart, Adair, and Atlantic]. In dry weather there is little to choose betwen the rival routes. Go to Sioux City by way of Blair, Oakland, and Lyons on the Nebraska side and then to Sioux Falls by way of Hawarden and Canton. From Sioux Falls to Madison you pass through Hartford, Colton, Chester, and Wentworth.

Please inform me if there is a map of the Lincoln highway published and by whom? T. F. Masterson, Chicago.

Yes, maps of the Lincoln highway are published. You can get one free, in addition to road data, by addressing the secretary of the Lincoln Highway association, Detroit, Mich.

What is the value of a muffler cutout? I always thought it relieved the motor by allowing the exhausted gases to escape more freely and that more power was gained thereby. I recently was informed that the Packard company conducted tests and apparently proved that there was nothing gained by the use of the cutout. If this is true, then why are cars provided with cutouts?

F. J. Seiter, Chicago.

In cars of modern construction, but little, if any, back pressure is caused as the burned gases are discharged through the muffler. The mufflers are both silent and efficient and are so constructed as to take care of back pressure on the motor. There is not an automobile engineer or designer in the industry who is not endeavoring in every way to develop a quiet motor, and nearly all of them discourage the practice of using muffler cutouts. As a matter of fact, few of the leading makers are equipping their cars with cutouts, which they consider obsolete and unnecessary. If you notice closely I believe you will find that the type of man who has himself paged in hotels and restaurants takes delight in making all the noise he possibly can when driving his car, and with this end in view takes his new machine to a shop and has it equipped with a cutout, which he uses on all occasions, despite the fact that city ordinances forbid the use of the device. About the only practical use for a muffler cutout is on rare occasions, when something goes wrong with the motor. Then it permits the motorist to listen to the explosions to see that they follow in regular sequence. Of course, racing cars are the exception, for they are driven at such high speed that all possible power is necessary.

What is the most direct road from Chicago to Milwaukee? What is the distance? R. E. Reilly, Chicago.

The most direct road to Milwaukee is the shore route, which goes through Evanston, Wilmette, Glencoe, Highland Park, Lake Forest, Waukegan, Kenosha, Racine, and South Milwaukee. The mileage is 89.9 miles.

Besides maintaining a bureau of information as to the best automobile routes throughout the country "The Tribune" is prepared to answer all technical questions about automobiles. Address all inquiries to High Speed, care of "The Tribune," Chicago.

Moline-Knight "40"—$1450

Do you know a Knight-motored car owner who ever went back to the poppet valve?

Can you name a single car owner who ever drove a Knight-Motored car and then went back to the old style poppet valve?

Why not get some first hand information from the men who KNOW—the men who have driven Knight-Motored cars thousands of miles—experienced car owners who have driven other makes which they have abandoned for the Knight-Motor.

Then go a step farther. Interview some of the Moline-Knight owners right here in your own city. We will be glad to give you a partial or complete list. After you conduct this inquiry, if you don't agree with us that Moline-Knight owners are the biggest, the most enthusiastic bunch of boosters you ever met anywhere, then we will call the deal off.

Don't you think you owe it to yourself and your bank account to do this—to at least investigate the Moline-Knight before you decide—especially when you can do so without incurring any obligation on your part?

Reserve flow of power always at your finger tips

A little extra reserve power is a mighty good thing to have at certain times. It may be that you will want to call on it to help you up a hill that has a steep, short turn in it—perhaps the same hill that you have avoided in the cars that you owned in the past—or you may want this extra reserve power to pull through one of those nasty, deep muck holes, or heavy-going sandy stretches—or for the sake of safety you will need it in making a quick forward pass through a pinch in crowded traffic—or just for the sheer joy of giving the other fellow a little of his own dust in a friendly brush out in one of the open places away from traffic squad.

The mechanical principle and the perfected construction of the Moline-Knight "40" absolutely insures you this extra reserve power. Extra reserve power is only one of the many exclusive advantages you will enjoy as the owner of your Moline-Knight—let us tell you about them.

National "HIGHWAY"

Six and Twelve Cylinder Cars are Style Motors

EVERY business has its style center—has certain designers who originate. For every originator there are many imitators. Many National originated styles are copied. National builders create style designs and advance improvements both for the efficiency of mechanism and for the rider's luxury and appearance.

National built the first American Sixes; was a pioneer with the left-side drive with the stream-line body, with the twelve cylinder motor, etc.; and set the world's standard for speed and stamina in stock cars. National styles rule leaders—they dominate—they attract. Yet, in all of the many styles originated by National there is one central idea—one something that is strictly National. It is notable in all National cars. National styles have a definite meaning and are made simply for sales impetus.

Only because of fifteen years of experience is National able to offer the new Highway models, creations of unusual beauty and intrinsic worth, at such moderate prices. Why not appear in public in "America's best looking car"?

Exhaust Echoes

The advance made in the automobile industry since the advent of the electric self-starter first applied to the 1912 Cadillac is shown by the fact that there are now approximately 500,000 cars equipped with Exide batteries, which was the pioneer in this class of work. The Electric Storage Battery company, maker of this battery, has service stations at 40 North Crawford avenue, 3759 Sheffield avenue, and in Thirty-fifth street opposite the White Sox park.

Chief Engineer T. P. Chase of the King Motor Car company has added another Lookout mountain on high gear record to his string. This time Chase piloted an eight cylinder King over Lookout mountain, California. He already holds a record for taking a King over Lookout mountain in Colorado on the high gear. His friend look for him doing the same thing on Lookout mountain in Tennessee before long.

A. M. Robbins, president of the Centaur Motor company, Jeffery distributor, has announced an extension of service for Jeffery owners in this vicinity. Hereafter the service department will operate on a twenty-four hour basis. That there will be any great demand upon night men is not anticipated, and of course it will not be necessary to keep a full force, but to take care of the emergency calls for assistance, a skilled mechanic will be on duty at all times.

Overland automobiles are playing a part in the present chase of Pancho Villa by Uncle Sam's troops. Two cars driven by the Overland dealer at Deming, N. M., and his assistant, rushed Deming militia to reinforce troops on the border following the recent attack on Columbus, N. M., by Pancho Villa. The automobiles are still in active service carrying newspaper men and officers along the border, as well as bringing back a number of wounded Villa Mexicans to Deming.

R. O. Gill, factory manager of the Saxon Motor Car company, has devised a plan that resulted in loading fifty-four Saxon motor cars onto seventeen flat cars and gondolas in less than two hours. He took out the ends of the gondolas and bridged over the gap between cars. Then he built a runway from the ground up to the floor of the rear car. Each automobile had gasoline enough in its tank to run it aboard the train.

The ordering of special colors for automobiles is a habit that many automobile buyers have acquired through the desire of the salesman to use the "freak" color as an added talking point, according to R. L. Cleveland, superintendent of the Moon Motor Car company. "Customers often have a notion that they prefer a certain color," Cleveland declared. "They see a panel finished in the color and they imagine they like it. Frequently, when the car comes, the color does not please because it seems to be too extreme. Ordering special colors always means a delay in shipment and therefore disappointment and explanations. When the special colors are rushed through it is impossible to get as good a job as with the standard colors."

Three hundred and fifty automobile men, representing the parts manufacturing end, were guests of the King Motor Car company at Detroit last week. It was a unique gathering in that it brought together at a time when the industry is clamoring for different parts the men who are moving every obstacle possible to produce parts so that the automobile industry will be able to make deliveries of cars.

W. S. Marshall of Minneapolis, an American obliged recently to leave Sonora, Mex., tells about a 1910 KisselKar, one of a fleet of motors in the employ of the mining company in which Mr. Marshall is interested. "This old war horse was ever ready," says Mr. Marshal, "and we got to feel that it would take us out of any difficulty we might encounter. I took a 500 mile trip in it in February, and the machinery did not show a sign of defect or old age."

The sewing machine plays its part in motor car building. In the Oakland Motor company's factory forty sewing machines are in operation. They stitch the cloth and leather for the tops and seats and trimmings that go into the makeup of the body furnishings.

"The simple life is not so much in demand today as is the simple automobile," said G. W. Smith, chief engineer of the Thomas B. Jeffery company. "The experienced buyer wants simplicity in his automobile because he knows that it means 'standup' quality, freedom from trouble, and low maintenance cost." The simplicity of chassis design in the new Jeffery six is alone sufficient to account for the instantaneous success of this car. It literally sold itself in many cases on the strength of its chassis alone, according to Mr. Smith. Even its spectacular performance, due to the Jeffery principle of providing great power at the speeds used most, had little to do with sales in a good many cases.

Speaking of the general tendency to advance the prices on all makes of automobiles, W. L. Githens, president of the Maxwell Auto Sales company, said that his recent visit to Detroit had shown him the necessity for the advance in price. Although the Maxwell company has not yet made any official announcement of an advance, Mr. Githens was unable to obtain any assurance that such would not be made in the near future.

Heroes in Defeat Laurel Deserving.

SOME fallen heroes are brought home in honor on their shields; others are dragged by the heels around the walls of captured cities by their conquerors.

In the field of automobile racing there is a tendency to administer a mild Hectorian treatment to the vanquished. It is done unconsciously, but done nevertheless. The Jacksonian doctrine has been applied to the sport. To the victor belong the spoils—the richest purse, all the applause, and most of the publicity. That is the decree of the promoters and spectators.

It is a proceeding far from just. Look back over the racing records and you will find there the names of several drivers who were as great in defeat as others were in victory—in some instances greater—but who received only a small reward or no reward at all for their skill, their daring, their sacrifice.

With halting memory turning the pages I can enumerate a few such episodes:

In the Indianapolis five century classic of 1912 Ralph De Palma led the field for 495 of the 500 miles. He drove at a speed never before attained on the Hoosier bricks. With only two more laps to go he was passed and beaten by Joe Dawson when the motor of the Mercedes played him false. When the prize money was split there was none for De Palma. Even the American speedway records for the intermediate distances that he had established were denied him by the A. A. A. contest board.

Two years later on the same course Joe Dawson wrecked his car and took chances with death in order to save the life of a mechanician who had been thrown from a rival car and lay prostrate on the track. Dawson's only reward for such heroism was fractures and bruises from which he has not yet completely recovered.

The late Harry Grant, at the wheel of a Sunbeam, established a world's nonstop record in the Chicago motor derby of last year, driving the 500 miles without a halt and at a speed of 94.3 miles an hour. He finished fifth and received only $3,000, although his perpetual motion achievement was just as meritorious as Resta's victory, for which the latter was paid $20,000.

But enough of resumé.

Instead of giving $1,000 to the leader at the end of each century, as was done last year, the promoters of the Chicago derby might take the initiative in the worthy plan and hang up $4,000 for the most meritorious achievement marking the 300 miles of competition. The decision could be left to the officials—the judges, the referee, the starter, and the representative of the contest board of the American Automobile association.

Speed, skill, daring, heroism—each might be the deciding factor in making the award. Before the starting bomb explodes and while the race is in progress the drivers will not know on what basis merit will be judged. It may be for a high average. Consequently they will let their cars out to the limit, in hopes of qualifying for the added purse. It may be for persistence in the face of heavy odds or for such a sacrifice as Dawson made in the Indianapolis classic of 1914.

This uncertainty will make for a better, faster race, and prize money for the most meritorious achievement will place a premium on sportsmanship that will put the sport on a higher plane. There also will be spoils for the vanquished as well as for the victor. And this is as it should be.

Gossip of the Auto Trade

A cast aluminum shell such as is used in the construction of all Pierce-Arrow cars is being exhibited at the local Pierce-Arrow agency. The shell gives the onlooker a much clearer insight to what the Pierce-Arrow car is built of than can any word or pen picture.

The Elgin Motor Car corporation's general office building in Chicago's "Automobile row," in Michigan boulevard, will be ready for occupation by May 1. The ground floor accommodates the Chicago show and sales rooms and the headquarters of the Elgin service department. The rest of the building will be taken up with the general and executive offices of the corporation, now in tthe Consumers' building.

Charles Denby, vice president of the Hupp Motor Car corporation, is on a six months' visit to China. Mr. Denby, who was formerly United States consul general at Shanghai, has numerous interests in the orient. He is considered one of the best American authorities on China, as he lived in that country for twenty-two years. He served in many official capacities, including that of secretary general during the Boxer revolution, and was for several years American adviser to President Yuan Shi Kai when he was viceroy of the province of Tientsin.

George M. Dickson, general manager of the National factories at Indianapolis, says: "If the motor car resources of this country were organized so that any part of them could be mobilized for quick use, it would undoubtedly be one of the best preparedness acts that could be accomplished. Certainly the 3,000,000 automobiles in the United States could transport a big army and necessary supplies, and do it promptly, if some kind of organization could be effected through the many automobile clubs."

A STATEMENT

Concerning Final Drive in White Motor Trucks

IN VIEW of the conflicting claims for this form and that form of final drive which now confront the purchaser of heavy duty trucks, this Company, as the largest manufacturer of motor trucks in America, deems it fitting to make a public statement of its own purpose and practice in the matter.

White Trucks of over two tons capacity have always been chain-driven, and will continue to be chain-driven until some other form of final drive is developed in the future which is more efficient or equally efficient. In its present stage of development, worm drive will not be adopted by this Company, and White engineers now see no prospect of its basic handicaps ever being sufficiently overcome to warrant its adoption.

CHAIN DRIVE EFFICIENCY

1. White chain-driven trucks are more efficient because more power is delivered to the rear wheels.
2. They require a smaller motor for equal load capacity.
3. They consume less gasoline, getting as high as 50% more mileage per gallon.
4. They endure a higher road speed; perform more easily on rough roads, steep grades, and in heavy going.
5. They pull loads out of chuck holes and over obstructions which would stall a worm-driven truck.
6. Tire mileage is materially greater because the unsprung weight on the wheels is so much less.

WHITE TRUCK PERFORMANCE

Motor trucks have been in use long enough to accumulate a volume of motor truck experience, long enough for owners to know actual operating value. They can compare one truck with another. They have the records of performance; and large users who keep the most effective cost records indicate the showing of those records by an overwhelming preference for White Trucks.

That preference is well known. It is eloquently reflected in the fact that in total annual sales White Trucks predominate two to one of any other make, and among many large users they predominate ten to one.

WHITE TRUCK PREDOMINANCE

When a truck both outsells any competitor two to one and commands a higher price—its competition is severely felt by trucks of similar design, so severely in fact, as to necessitate a change in that design to escape the brunt of parallel competition. This gives rise to new theories of construction, which are adopted to arouse fresh interest rather than to improve the truck, in the endeavor to divert attention from White performance.

At this late stage of motor truck experience there is no need of truck buyers being bewildered by fads and theories. Over and above the conflict of all theory looms the solid fact of White Truck performance—longer life, more days in service, lower eventual cost, as attested by comparative cost records of numerous large users and by the fact that such users purchase more White Trucks every year than trucks of any other make.

MOTORS AND MOTORCYCLES

Movies Show Phases of Auto Industry.

THIS is the story of the introduction of the motor car to the movies, of the filming of America's third largest industry by the fifth; the story of a cinematograph production that was staged without the $100,000 charms of Billie Burke, the eyebrow mustache of Charlie Chaplin, the amethyst ring of Francis X. Bushman, or the vampire calisthenics of Theda Bara, but which promises to go big, nevertheless.

In attempting to write it, the automobile editor invades the sovereign domain of Mac Tinee and Kitty Kelly. Who knows before night they may organise a punitive expedition against me! But I should get overheated and suffer spontaneous combustion of the celluloid collar.

The die is cast! I plunge into the turgid waters of the Rio Grande to reach the forbidden borders of my pulsating narrative.

Quantity production, as exemplified by Ford, Overland, and Maxwell, has brought about a revolution in automobile manufacture. An output of 300,000 cars, the 1915 record of the Ford, and 125,000 machines, the 1916 mark set by Overland, requires extraordinary methods of construction and assembly, the use of labor saving, time saving machinery that reduces lost motion to the minimum, and makes every second as golden as the copy book adage would have us believe.

The Overland schedule of 125,000 cars for this year means a production of more than 400 cars a day or over forty cars an hour. How these automobiles are made in wholesale quantities, what ingenuous methods are employed in turning out this output is the theme of the moving picture film, taken at the Toledo plant, that is both sensational and educational.

That part of the film that shows the building of an automobile body is shown on the screen in less than five minutes, yet it took a staff of movie experts two whole days to complete this part of the picture.

The huge drop forging machines, which are the largest in the industry, are seen to advantage as they hammer molten metal into crankshafts and other parts with the same ease of operation that a housewife employs in cutting out biscuits from the batter.

But perhaps the most interesting pictures of the series are those taken in building 75, one of the new structures erected during the last year.

The entire top floor of the mammoth structure is given over to body making. Some idea of the quantity of lumber consumed in the wood working shops can be gained from the fact that it is possible to make 500 bodies a day in this building alone, and as the making of each body requires 214 board feet of lumber, this means a daily consumption of 100,000 feet of this commodity alone.

After leaving the wood working shop the body frames are placed on carriers and started on their journey through the various departments, which lead in succession to the body metal, finish, paint, upholstery, varnish, and assembly shops. Then the windshields and electric lighting outfits are put in place and the finished bodies are ready to be lowered through padded openings in the floor to the chassis assembly tracks below.

These tracks, or conveyors, as they are called, are four in number, and extend fully three-quarters the length of the building, and look not unlike a double tracked railroad.

As the bare frames of the cars are brought up from the floor below on constantly moving tramways, they are transferred to the chassis assembly conveyors. A number of expert mechanics then proceed to assemble the chassis, while the frame is moving along with the conveyor.

In a remarkably short time the rear axles and rear systems are fitted in place and a new squad of men installs the motor and steering gear. All of these parts are assembled prior to their arrival at the chassis assembly tracks. An endless chain of overhead conveyors carries them from the different assembly departments direct to the point where they can be lowered on to the chassis.

Each operation is timed to the minute, so that motors, steering gears, and axles swing into position over the frame without loss of time or motion. The result is that the chassis is built up piece by piece while it is kept moving along the tracks toward the paint shop. Control levers, fan and water manifolds are installed in their turn and the chassis is then ready to be painted.

After the operation is completed the conveyor hauls the chassis into the immense drying ovens which are similar in appearance to railroad tunnels.

When the chassis emerges from the other end of this tunnel it is near the end of its journey. Wheels, with tires on and inflated, are ready to be clamped on the instant it leaves the ovens. Then the enameled parts, such as running boards, fenders, and radiators are put in place and the chassis is ready to receive the body from the floor above.

As soon as the body is lowered into place, a squad of men surrounds the car, and in less time than it takes to tell it the hood and top are on and the seat cushions and floor mats adjusted. Then the car is released from the conveyor, the motor tuned up, and another Overland car is ready for its final road tests.

While it is impossible to depict each and every step in the manufacture of all parts of the car, enough pictures are shown to make it a continuous story from beginning to end. The parts are made and the units assembled in precisely the same way as though the camera were not focused on the mechanics at work. Every foot of film is a natural reproduction of scenes as they actually exist at the big Toledo plant.

ART by Louise James Bargelt

FEATURES OF ARCHITECTURAL EXHIBIT.

ONE of the features of the architectural exhibit at the Art institute which will present the greatest general appeal is the collection of paintings of dogs and cats by Persis Kermse. The same intensive sympathy with the subject in hand is necessary to the successful portrayal of animals as is required for children's paintings and that sympathy Miss Kermse possesses to a marvelous degree.

If her backgrounds of landscapes show less skill in delineation than the animals themselves and there is glimpsed at times a slightly photographic suggestion, these facts do not detract in any way from the irresistible appeal of the animals.

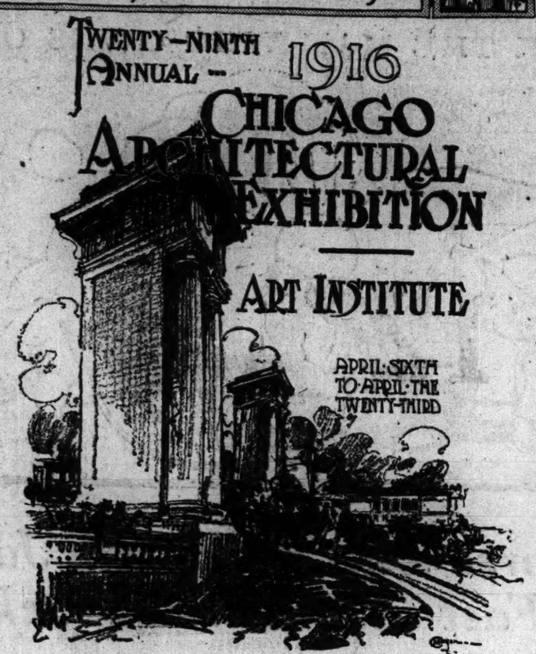
Another charming feature of the exhibit is some original drawings of old manor houses in England by Joseph Nash. They are quaintly inviting, suggestive of bygone pleasures and bygone folk. Borwick hall in Lancashire as well as Sutton place in Surrey are particularly attractive.

The American academy of Rome has submitted restorations and water colors of the Parthenon the temple of Mars, the Palazzo Piccolomini, and also sketch copies of effective old wall paintings by Pinturicchio depicting events in the life of Pope Pius II.

Nor is the architectural exhibit the only item of interest at the Art institute now. A new selection of Japanese color prints from the Clarence Buckingham collection has been hung in one of the smaller galleries and is to remain on exhibition until May 1. The artists who are represented are Kitao Shigemasa and his pupils Masanobu and Shunman. Shigemasa is the older and the prints in the collection show interesting developments in the different stages of his work. The first of them was published as early as 1760 and the majority of them are in his own characteristic style. No one to whom the art of the orient holds an appeal should miss seeing these various prints, all of them of Japanese work done 200 years ago.

Walter Ufer is giving the second of a series of regular monthly exhibits for local artists in the large main gallery of Moulton & Ricketts, 71 East Van Buren street. The exhibit opened last Monday. In the collective exhibition Mr. Ufer offers the following subjects: Portrait of Carter H. Harrison; portrait of Mrs. W. W. Wardrop of Highland Park, Ill.; "In My Painting Jacket" [self portrait]; "In the Studio," "Trailing," "Sand Storm, Mojave Desert," "Cottonwood Lane, Isleta, N. M." "The Road to San Juan-Pueblo," "Harvest at the Pueblo," "First Snow in Taos, N. M." "Twilight—Pueblo Indian," "Old Lady from Dachan," and portrait study of man in Munich and three other studies.

The exhibit of the Independent Society of Artists, which opened on Tuesday in the Ohio building at Wabash avenue and Congress street, is being well attended.



This exhibition is practically jury free in that each member is entitled to show two works of art jury free. All laymen who are interested in the advancement of art in Chicago are invited to become associate members. The annual dues are $2.

MUSIC AND THE MUSICIANS

YVETTE GUILBERT, the famous French singer, will offer "Eight Centuries of Song" in costumes of the various periods at the Blackstone theater, beginning tomorrow night. With her will be the flutist, George Barrere, and Emily Gresser, violinist. Matinées are announced for Wednesday and Saturday, and a nightly change of program.

Maurice Rosenfeld, for many years identified with the musical activities of Chicago and the middle west as pianist, teacher, and critic, has resigned his position as member of the board of musical directors on the faculty of the Chicago Musical college, this action taking effect April 7, 1916. He will open his piano school in the new Kimball building.

The full roster of soloists announced for the Evanston festival of this spring includes Mischa Elman, violinist; Anna Case, Edith Mason, Helen Stanley, Alice Nielsen, and Mabel Sharp Herdien, sopranos; Clare Livingston Hansel, contralto; Morgan Kingston and Reed Miller, tenors; Pasquale Amato, Clarence Whitehill, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritones, and Burton Thatcher, bass.

The brief Blackstone theater engagement of the Boston Grand Opera company and Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe will start Thursday evening, April 27. The inability of the manager of the organization to rearrange a guaranteed schedule of performances in St. Paul explains why the return to Chicago will be in midweek rather than on the 24th inst. inasmuch as he has taken the Blackstone for the entire week. There will, in all, be six performances, arranged thus: Thursday evening, "L'Amore dei Tre Re"; Friday evening, "La Boheme"; Saturday afternoon, "Madama Butterfly"; Saturday evening, "Otello," specially revived for the Shakespeare tercentenary week; Sunday afternoon, "I Pagliacci," followed by "Coppelia"; Sunday evening, special program.

ASTRONOMY by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

GRAND CANYONS OF MOON.

THE moon is better mapped than the earth. Astronomers have done more than explorers. There are no unknown places on the moon. "Seas," craters, mountains, ranges of mountains, and valleys are named.

The old astronomers thought that the dark places which appear on the full moon were oceans, and modern astronomers have retained the name "mare" in the description. The moon's seas contain no water, but they remain "seas."

The principal mountain ranges have been named for the earth's ranges, the Caucasus, Alps, Apennines, Carpathians Cordilleras. When it is said that the moon is completely mapped it is meant that one side of the moon is so known, and only one side, of necessity, the moon always presenting the same side towards the earth. The moon takes precisely the same time to turn on its axis that it does to go around the earth.

The conspicuous marks of the moon are its craters. The crater called Aristotle is fifty miles in diameter, with walls 10,300 feet in height. The Grand Valley of the Alps is eighty miles long and from three and a half to six miles wide, with walls 11,500 feet deep. Aristillus is thirty-four miles wide and 10,000 feet in depth.

The crater Plato contains 2,700 square miles, and Copernicus, the grandest crater, has a central mountain of 2,400 feet. An opera glass will show the crater Tycho. It is fifty miles in diameter and 17,000 feet in depth and is conspicuous even in an opera glass because of the brilliant streaks which radiate from it.

When the moon is full these rays are the most conspicuous objects to be seen on its surface. Some of them are a few hundred miles in length; others are several thousand.

The deepest crater on the moon is called Theophilus. It is from 16,000 to 18,000 feet deep and is sixty-four miles in diameter. The highest mountains are about 42,000 feet high.

Mountains and craters are evidences of volcanic activity at some time probably when the earth was so hot that life was impossible upon it and when the moon was still hot enough for phenomena of this sort, evidence of a time when forces were active on our satellite, before organic evolution had begun on earth.

Sears-Cross
Absolutely Accurate
Spedindicator
Mechanical Type

DOES the indicating mechanism on your speedometer vibrate?

If it does, it is not a Sears-Cross.

Sears-Cross SPEDINDICATORS give a steady, non-vibrating indication of speed because the indicator is controlled by a mechanical DOUBLE governor.

When your Sears-Cross instrument indicates sixteen miles per hour over a rough road, it indicates that sixteen miles with a steady hand, which does not jump from ten to twenty miles per hour.

You don't guess with a Sears-Cross—YOU KNOW.

Ask your dealer to show you the Sears-Cross gearless mechanical horn. Sears-Cross HORNS, and SPEDINDICATORS for unequipped cars such as Ford, Chevrolet, Saxon and Monroe, are for sale by the best dealers.

Batteries Are Different

A Technical Talk Written for the Layman

Illustration No. 1

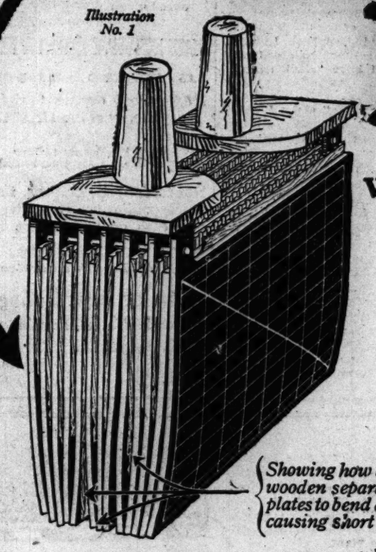

Illustration No. 2

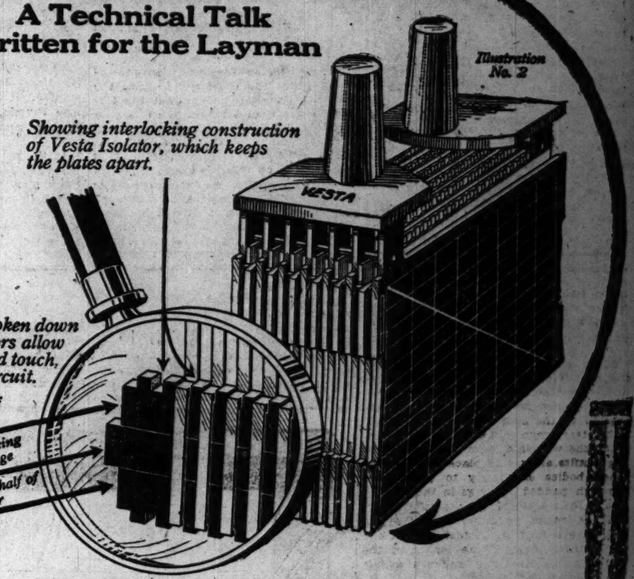

Showing interlocking construction of Vesta Isolator, which keeps the plates apart.

Showing how broken down wooden separators allow plates to bend and touch, causing short circuit.

Upper half of Isolator

Lower half of Isolator

The materials used in most storage batteries are the same. Any manufacturer can buy the best antimony, lead oxides, tested rubber jars and oak battery boxes. Most manufacturers do.

But, materials alone do not make the battery.

The secret of a good battery lies inside the battery itself, in the inside unseen construction.

The top quality materials used in Vesta Batteries can be duplicated. They are duplicated.

But, Vesta experience and the inside construction of Vesta Batteries cannot be duplicated.

—First, because Vesta has been making automobile batteries longer than any other concern in the United States.

—Second, because the inside construction of the Vesta Battery is covered by U. S. basic patents, and no other battery manufacturer is allowed to use the Vesta type of construction.

These patents cover the Vesta Indestructible Isolator shown at the top of this advertisement. A glance at illustration No. 2 suffices to show you how the Vesta Indestructible Isolator prevents short circuits—the most common cause of all battery deterioration and the most expensive of all battery damages to repair.

Note how the Vesta Indestructible Isolator locks the plates apart. They cannot move even the slightest part of an inch and rub the delicate porous wood mats between the plates. Short circuits are practically unknown in Vesta Batteries. Only long use or severe abuse will wear one of them out—and at that a Vesta will last twice as long as any other make of storage battery.

And now note (illustration No. 1) what happens to the ordinary storage battery. In the ordinary type of storage battery, and by this we mean the type used by all other battery makers today, the porous wood mats between the plates act as separators. They must stand all the strain. Wood, no matter how carefully prepared, after it has been in the strong sulphuric acid of the battery for a few weeks becomes a soft pulp. But for the close fit of the plates it would fall apart.

So it is easy to see why this soft wood pulp, which is obliged to serve the double purpose of a plate separator and insulator, will not stand up long. That it lasts as long as it does is a wonder even to the people who make batteries.

Gradually it wears away, usually at the bottom first. One plate touches another—Short Circuit (illustration No. 1)—and the whole cell is out of business permanently. To repair this the battery must be torn down and built up anew at considerable expense.

The wooden mats in the Vesta Battery are not used as separators at all. The Vesta Indestructible Isolator, which is made of celluloid—a material not affected by battery acid—performs this function. It does more than this. In addition to locking the plates apart, it keeps them exactly the same distance apart. This allows each plate to receive and distribute its equal share of the electric load, a technical point, but highly important where the efficiency and life of the battery is concerned.

There is at no time any strain on the porous wooden mats in the Vesta Battery. The plates of the battery are rigidly locked apart by the Vesta Indestructible Isolator. It is impossible for them to rub the wood mats.

Consider these facts when you buy a new battery or replace your old one, and if you respect your pocketbook you will buy a Vesta.

Vesta Batteries are made in all sizes and all types and are interchangable with all Starting, Lighting and Ignition systems.

See the Vesta Battery with the Indestructible Isolator at our Chicago show rooms or any Vesta service station. Service stations everywhere.

PAIGE
The Standard of Value and Quality

Do These Facts Mean Anything To You?

1. During the month of March—which was distinctly a winter month in most sections of the country—the American people bought 1200 Paige "Fairfields" and paid for them one million, five hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars.

2. At the time this advertisement is written, every single dealer in the Paige sales organization has attempted to increase his regular allotment of cars.

3. Many Paige distributors have already sold their entire April allotments of the Fairfield "Six-46"—and are now taking special allotments as fast as we can supply them.

Just read these three paragraphs over again—and discover for yourself the real significance of such overwhelming demand for one motor car.

We don't suggest that you merely "follow the crowd." We don't suggest that you be influenced by any other consideration than your own personal preference.

But we do maintain that there must be an intelligent reason for such nation-wide indorsement of the Paige Fairfield "Six-46." We want you to discover that reason.

A visit to the Paige dealer will, undoubtedly, put you on the right track. But don't delay too long, please. See this car while "immediate deliveries" are still possible.

"PLAYS FOR SMALL STAGES."

HAVE you ever noticed when you read a play that when you shut your eyes and try to see the stage it somehow takes on such hazy proportions that before you know it you've stopped trying to focus the play into a picture and all you do is just listen to the characters talk?

It isn't because the stage settings are described with too hasty a pen. G. B. S., for instance, goes into the minutest details about the stage setting and the stage atmosphere. But I defy any one who has never seen the Irish players do "The Shewing Up of Blancho Posnet" to tell me what the wild west courthouse looks like. That's because plays are written to be given on large stages, and we just don't take in the proportions of a large stage when we read about it.

There's a book of "Plays for Small Stages" [Duffield] which you may not have seen yet. It is by Mary Aldis. The plays are one act bits of tragedy, comedy, and joyous farce. They have all been put on at the Playhouse in Lake Forest, the charming little place which Mr. and Mrs. Aldis made from a cottage on their estate. And when you read them your mind sets a little stage for the characters, and you see what is happening as you read the words they speak.

They are real plays, too, surprisingly real when you have laid the book aside and remember that not one of them has taken more than a half hour to read. Incidentally, three of them had their professional debut this week at the Little theater, with the author playing the parts which she originally played in her tiny playhouse.

A confession is supposed to have come from the lips of one Mary Roberts Rinehart to the effect that she writes 'when there is not a fourth at bridge." And she is with the work of her own reluctant pen well in the fifty thousand a year class. Libel somewhere!

Frederick William Wile, who has been

Mary Aldis
SKETCHED BY ALBERT STERNER

for thirteen years a newspaper correspondent in Berlin, has written his experiences in Germany before and in England after the outbreak of the war. "The Assault" (Bobbs-Merrill) he has called his book. In the preface he says that it is not a war book, and that it is frankly prosaic in its sentiments. Sounds like a paradox, doesn't it?

Richard Le Gallienne is cruising among the Bahamas. News comes from those islands that, with some friends, he was seen setting out on a search for buried treasure, with all of the impedimenta which romantic fiction has made la mode for treasure hunting, and a large burglar proof safe besides. Which proves that a romantic poet can be a good business man, or that a business man who has sense enough to take a safe on a treasure hunting expedition is a romantic poet to start on said search.

For fear their subjects may learn something about the Germanic alliance the Austro-Hungarian government has forbidden the circulation of the following books: F. W. Whitridge's "An American Opinion on the War"; "Speeches on the War" by David Lloyd-George, Earl Kitchener, and Winston Churchill; "Can Germany Win?" by an American; James M. Beck's "The Double Alliance Against the Triple Entente"; Gilbert Murray's "Is the War Justified?" all publications of the League to Enforce Peace, New York; "Peace Call to Women," published by the Women's Peace association of Zurich, No. 150 [September, 1915], of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, containing articles on "American Interests After the European War," and James Bryce's "The Neutral Nations and the War."

Haven't you always wished you could find some simple book on home decoration, something that would give you general, usable principles that you could apply to antiques at $500 each to modern stuff at $5? Haven't you looked around your house every spring and wished somebody who knew would tell you what to buy, so that you wouldn't be looking at it next spring with eyes of woe? And haven't you looked in vain for said somebody? I came across a little book the other day that is just what I have hoped to find for many springs. It is the simplest of narratives. It gives the most usable of decorating principles? And it is, unlike most books on interior decoration, absolutely assimilable. It is splendid primer for the home lover who wants his or her house to be dressed in the best possible taste. Maud Ann Sell and Henry Blackman Sell, both Chicagoans, have written it. "Good Taste in Home Furnishing" (John Lane) it is called.

A biographical bit about Sophie Kerr, author of "Love at Large" [Harper's]: After her college course and a year of post-graduate work, she wrote one day to the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, to which she had been sending short articles, and asked if they had any place for her on the staff. When they said they had, she left her home town in Maryland and went to the city of smoke. She found newspaper work "great fun." "I was fortunate enough," she says, "to be in an office where every one was interesting and very kind—a rather unusual state of affairs. After a while I did some magazine work, and the Woman's Home Companion took some of my stuff, and one day, when I was in New York, I went in to see them. Some months later I got a job there and I have 'stuck around' ever since."

"The Dune Country" (John Lane) is the title of a really lovely book of etchings and appreciations of the wonderland of sand on the lake shores in Indiana, which Earl H. Reed has written and illustrated.

Margaret Deland's "The Iron Woman" (Harpers) is being translated into Armenian. It has already been translated into French, German, and Swedish, and been transcribed for the blind.

At the request of the Drama League of America, Louise Ayres Garnett has written a play called "Master Will of Stratford" (Macmillan), which is intended for production by boys and girls. It deals with the youth of Shakespeare. It will be recommended by the Drama league for amateur presentation during the Shakespeare tercentennial.

Arnold Bennett thinks—for publication—that the greatest fault with Anglo-Saxon fiction has been that it would not look facts in the face, and that this criticism applies even to the best.

Booth Tarkington has written in "Seventeen: A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family, Especially William" [Harpers] a series of tales about youth that are sure to bring reminiscent chuckles into middle aged throats.

Sir Rider Haggard has left England on a trip around the wirld, with a mission from the Royal Colonial institute to investigate the chances for empire building after the war.

ASK THE MAN WHO OWNS ONE

A Horse will Stand Still Just as Fast as a Motor Truck

But—

Map out your traffic so that it rolls steadily all through the working day, and you get the last penny of extra profit to be had from motor hauling.

At the same time you get the difference between a truck that keeps on hauling and one that keeps on stalling.

For there are trucks and trucks.

The lame ones will stand up at the loading platform with the same swagger as the real ones.

But they won't stand up on the road—and that's where the real truck turns miles into money.

That's where the Packard truck has squelched pretenders in more than two hundred lines of trade—on the road.

Which is not surprising.

For the Packard truck is built for the road, in the factory which has set the standards of motor vehicle progress for seventeen years.

Because of Packard experience, resources and lasting responsibility, it naturally is built stronger, simpler, more carefully.

And being a Packard, from motor to monogram, it needs less attention, fewer repairs, less coaxing—it will stand more shocks and hammering the year around.

It will haul more goods, over a longer time and at a lower cost than any other railless carrier.

There is a size for every service. From the swift, light one-tonner to the 6½-ton dreadnaught, all are of the same advanced silent, chainless design.

There is no duplicate of the Cadillac Eight—in performance, or in quality, or in value.

There is much talk about equaling the Cadillac. To attempt it is a praiseworthy ambition; but to accomplish it is another matter. One might as well try to duplicate the work of Shakespeare or of Michael Angelo.

The wonderful Cadillac performance is not the result of a formula which has to be merely copied. Cadillac enduring quality is not a matter of specifications and measurements, only to be followed. Cadillac good value is not achieved by planning to build "as good a car as possible at a limited price."

The Cadillac performance, and quality, and value cannot be duplicated because they are the product of distinctly Cadillac ideas. Cadillac engineers are first of all creators, developers, originators. Their inspiration comes from within themselves. They have an ideal—the perfect automobile. They follow nobody.

If there ever comes a super-Shakespeare, Shakespeare will be outdone, excelled—but copied?—never. If there ever develops a superior to the Cadillac organization it will outdo the Cadillac car—but duplicate it?—hardly.

The Cadillac performance will remain unduplicated because it was originated, not copied. The Cadillac quality will remain distinctive because it is a product of ideals, not of business expediency. The Cadillac value will remain unequaled because it has become unavoidable, automatic. The public demands so great an output that efficiency is compelled on the Cadillac factory.

It is a mighty tribute to Cadillac genius to have its car so widely followed. But it is ridiculous to assume that Cadillac originality can be duplicated. You cannot buy a duplicate of the Cadillac performance, quality, and value—any more than you can get a duplicate of Shakespeare. There is nothing "just as good."

Some Men I Know.

(Special car excursion Tuesday, April 11.)

SOME MEN I KNOW have wanted for years to acquire land but could not find a way to do it until they heard of my plan.

OTHER MEN I KNOW have been so blinded by suspicion and distrust of everybody who has anything to sell that they block their own progress. Some of them will never wake up and some have finally learned that a man's interests are often advanced by co-operating with others.

I HAVE BEEN in the land business [20 years in the same county] long enough to have learned that my customers' interests are my interests: their success, my success, and I try to assist, satisfy, and please. I have a purchasing arrangement on a minimum scale adapted both to "hard" and good times where one can pay very little or more as he chooses. The terms are as low as $10 to $50 down and $5 to $10 per month for 40 acres. After the land is partly paid for you are insured for the balance. Ask about the privilege of exchange.

IF YOU WILL INVESTIGATE you will be convinced that I am responsible, appreciate your needs, and can assist you in the purchase of a good piece of land with a perfect title in Manistee, Mason, Lake, or Wexford counties, and look after my customers' interests the same as my own.

TO INTELLIGENTLY SELECT LAND get my literature which describes all the conditions for agriculture, the soils, crops, and live stock interests of my district. Drop a postal for this literature or call for it and see samples of our clover, vetch, rye, wheat, oats, corn, barley, millet, buckwheat, timothy, alfalfa, potatoes, many kinds of vegetables, and the variety of fruits that prove so highly profitable in this central location of Michigan's Fruit Belt. There is no better place for the poultry business.

MY NEXT SPECIAL CAR EXCURSION will leave Chicago Tuesday, April 11. Round trip from Chicago, including railroad fare, meals, and lodging, $12.50. Accommodations for both men and women. Automobiles free. Offices remain open Monday evening and Saturday afternoon.

George Swigart,
OWNER.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

CHAIN GROCERY STORES

have reduced the cost of living and made the stockholders rich. If you have a few dollars to invest this is your chance to get in on the ground floor of a big local proposition.

"The trend of the times is toward the CHAIN STORE SYSTEM and it has come to stay."

We have been running the above "ad" for the past two weeks and getting splendid results, which proves that the people are aware of what the chain stores have done in the way of dividends to the owners and are anxious to get in on a good thing.

The Capital Stock of this company is selling at a rapid rate and the inducements we are offering appeal to the man with a little money or the man with a large amount. We prefer the small investor, as we want as many boosters as we can possibly get.

Do not answer this unless you have money to invest. We have no time for pikers or curiosity seekers.

If you mean business we can show you a good opportunity to make some money right here in Chicago.

Address K T 178, Tribune.

LAST OPPORTUNITY—ACT NOW.

Many answered our previous Ad in The Tribune; some have already invested. There remain unsold now ONLY $2,000 interest; we offer.

$100 investment; $50 down, $25 monthly.
$250 investment; $100 down, $50 monthly.
$500 investment; $200 down, $100 monthly.

Our business has grown rapidly; we have just moved into our new quarters; also, just closed large contract, which we believe will enable us the first year to pay back 43 cents each $1 invested.

COLE

USED CAR SALE.

Terms or Cash.

OUR NEW COLE 8 IS SUCH A PRONOUNCED SUCCESS THAT THE DEMAND FOR THEM HAS BEEN FAR BEYOND OUR EXPECTATIONS. WE HAVE BEEN OVERWHELMED WITH OFFERS OF TRADES OF USED CARS AS PART PAYMENT FOR THE COLE 8.

WE HAVE TRADED FOR A GREAT MANY CARS OF ALMOST EVERY MAKE, BEING VERY CONSERVATIVE AS TO THE ALLOWANCE FOR THEM, AND THE RESULT IS THAT WE WILL FIND IN THIS LARGE STOCK OF USED CARS NONE BUT THE LATEST AND BEST KNOWN HIGH GRADE CARS AT SURPRISINGLY LOW PRICES. CARS THAT HAVE BEEN DRIVEN ONLY A SHORT DISTANCE, OTHERS THAT HAVE BEEN COMPLETELY OVERHAULED AND REFINISHED, VIRTUALLY LIKE NEW, AND AS FAR AS SERVICE IS CONCERNED, WILL GIVE YOU MORE REAL MILEAGE AND CHEAPER THAN ANY CHEAP NEW CAR. ANOTHER THING, THE PRIDE OF OWNERSHIP OF A GOOD HIGH GRADE AUTOMOBILE, EVEN THOUGH IT HAS BEEN USED SOME, IS GREATER THAN IN A NEW CAR OF AN INFERIOR MAKE.

OUR INVOICE ON THE 1ST OF THE MONTH SHOWED OVER 100 CARS IN STOCK. THE FOLLOWING IS A PARTIAL LIST ONLY, AS THE COST OF SPACE PROHIBITS US RUNNING A COMPLETE ONE. WE WISH TO EXTEND AN INVITATION TO VISIT OUR USED CAR DEPT. AND LOOK OVER THESE WONDERFUL BARGAINS:

NOTICE.

Contrary to the usual custom of having salesmen whose sole ambition seems to be that of obtaining your name and address only to annoy you later to sell you a car that you do not want, our policy is that if our cars do not interest you after an inspection it will be only because we do not have the particular model that you want.

FOR YOUR CONVENIENCE WILL BE OFFERED ALL DAY SUNDAY AND EVERY EVENING THIS WEEK.

A REBUILT CADILLAC

It's a Safe Used Car to Buy

SPECIAL VALUES NOW

A rebuilt Cadillac is superior to any new car at the same price. They are the truest values on the street. By rebuilt we mean that the cars have been taken entirely apart, each part examined, and, if necessary, replaced by a new part made at the Cadillac factory, the entire car repainted and refinished like new, all equipment put in first class condition—the whole car, in fact, carefully reconstructed until it is good as new in every detail.

We offer Cadillacs exclusively, as we do not accept other makes in trade. Consequently we are as interested in the performance of these rebuilt cars as we are in new Cadillacs. In actual service value these cars are worth a great deal more than we ask for them, and we usually have a variety of body styles to select from. See them before you buy.

SHARP SETBACK IN GRAIN MARTS; LONGS SELLERS

Fear of Political Complications Factor—Warmer Weather Is Forecast.

Liquidation of long wheat was in evidence the greater part of the session yesterday. Prices suffered materially, but rallied sharply from the extreme low points. Net losses for the day were 1½c to 1⅝@1½c lower. Northwest markets were weaker, the selling at Winnipeg being influenced by the forecast for warmer weather. Cold weather was prevalent through the grain belts, extremely low temperatures for the season being reported in the southwest. Most of the winter wheat belt, however, had a fall of snow, which was regarded as favorable.

In the northwest most of the reports indicate a late season so far as farm work is concerned. There is still plenty of time to sow spring crops, provided the ground can be prepared in season. This feature is the big factor at present.

Cash Demand Is Quiet.

The cash trade was quiet here. Sales were 35,000 bu and there was some export business on the break at the seaboard. The offerings from the country continue liberal, and primary receipts for the week were 6,482,000 bu, compared to 2,110,000 bu a year ago. Northwest receipts show some falling off, but are still much larger than a year ago, 330 cars for the day, against 163 cars a year ago. Winnipeg had 478 cars for the day, against 23 cars a year ago.

The forecast was for warmer conditions in the spring wheat country with continued cold over the winter wheat belt. Foreign news was without special importance, except that Argentine and Australian offers were more liberal. Cables were unchanged and the Liverpool market was dull. Arrivals at the United Kingdom ports are expected to be liberal this coming week.

Selling Heavy at Start.

The selling of wheat was general early, led by Ware-Leland, Armour, Wagner, Clement-Curtis, Thomson-McKinnon, and Bartlett-Frazier. On the break commission houses turned buyers in several instances. Logan-Bryan bought on the break, and there was free buying by Ware-Leland, Mackenzie-Day, Thomson-McKinnon, Updike, and Raymond-Pynchon. Northwest cash markets were steady. Minneapolis stocks decreased 126,000 bu for one day and Duluth increased 513,000 bu for the week.

Receipts here were 170 cars and primary receipts for the day were 959,000 bu, against 382,000 bu a year ago. Clearances for the day were 705,000 bu. Crop reports from Le Count and Inglis from Indiana and Ohio were bullish.

Ky Corn Under Pressure.

Corn prices were weak most of the day, rallying a little in the last hour. Final prices were ⅛@⅝c off, the May being weaker than the other months. Cash prices were easy, and the demand was slow, shipping sales being 65,000 bu. A moderate inquiry was reported at the seaboard. The southwest markets reported quite a good demand for corn. Receipts continue quite liberal throughout the west, primary arrivals being 50,000 bu, against 426,000 bu a year ago, with total receipts for the week 3,820,000 bu, compared to 2,763,000 bu a year ago.

Cables were firm, ½d up for spot at Liverpool, reflecting bullish Argentine advices. Clearances for the day were 33,000 bu. Weather conditions were somewhat unfavorable for marketing of corn, and farmers will be busy with spring work as soon as the weather conditions are more favorable.

Slow Trade in Oats.

Oats trade was of moderate volume. The break in wheat was followed by oats. Northwest receipts were ½c to ¼@⅝c. Armour and Ralston were sellers of oats. Jackson was about the best buyer early. Shorts covered on the break. The cash market was a little easier with shipping sales of 35,000 bu. Receipts were 103 cars and primary points had 4,412,000 bu for the week, compared to 3,936,000 bu a year ago. No clearances were reported.

Hog Products Are Steady.

Provisions prices were without material change. There was fair early buying by Dole-Roy-Saunders and Letgens. Selling pressure was not particularly. The cash trade was fairly active, and the export situation is favorable. Hog receipts were 12,000, with 36,000 for Monday and 18,000 for the coming week. Prices at the yards were steady. Western receipts for the week were 393,000, compared to 73,000 bu a year ago.

Rye Dull and Steady.

Rye ruled steady, with No. 2 quoted 96c nominal and No. 4 selling at 87½c. Receipts were 5 cars.

Barley was quiet and steady. Malting was quoted 70@78c, with sales at 71@75c; feed was quotable at 60@68c and sold 63@ 67c; mixing was quoted 67@68c, and steaming 56@60c, later selling at 49c. Receipts, 41 cars.

Timothy seed was steady, with cash lots quoted $4.50@8.00 nominal and clover seed unchanged, with cash lots $10.00@ 12.00 nominal.

Lard on the Board closed 1½c higher. Cash on hand, $2.11½@2.11; May, $2.10½, and July $2.11½. Receipts, 2 cars. Minneapolis was 30c higher, with cash on track $2.10½ @2.11½; receipts were 23 cars. Winnipeg was 6@10 higher; May $1.87½, and July $1.88½. Receipts, 18 cars.

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF BOARD OF TRADE.

"The government report of yesterday, when figured to show the indicated crop by states, in accordance with the government method of interpreation, shows the winter killing loss in the leading wheat states in a striking manner," said B. W. Snow. "It makes the indicated crop in the soft wheat states of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri 96,461,000 bu, against a total last year of 135,250,000 bu. In the trans-Missouri states the loss is also important, Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma promising only 176,682,000 bu, against 209,006,000 bu last year."

The cash demand is moderate for wheat, export brokers stating the only inquiry was for quick shipment. Offerings from the country continue fair. Receipts northwest are fairly liberal. With good weather for spring work a seasonable falling off in the movement is expected. Prices here were easy for spring wheat and a little firmer for red winters. Cash sales were 35,000 bu. The seaboard reports indicated a moderate demand from the other side. Cash corn and oats were the same, with an indifferent demand. Sales were 65,000 bu corn and 105,000 bu oats.

Sincere & Co. say: "The government report was not particularly out of line with general expectation and its market influence has not caused more than temporary surprise. We believe, however, that it has confirmed a greater menace than is indicated, and that its ultimate effect will be soon seen in sharp and radical appreciation."

"There is no serious cause for alarm over wheat conditions between Chicago and St. Louis," said James E. Bennett. "The imagination of the car window experts is keener than their eyes. In vicinity of Kansas City wheat looks fine. From Kansas City to Chicago, over the Santa Fe, there are no more than the usual number of bad spots."

John Inglis wired Logan-Bryan from Terre Haute that the general condition of the Indiana wheat crop in the central part of the state is poor. Acreage was said to be about 25 per cent less than the previous year. Wheat on light soil is the best.

The weaker tone in the northwestern markets, especially at Winnipeg, was due largely to the prospects for warmer weather, the forecast indicating moderating conditions throughout the spring wheat country.

Kansas City wired Logan-Bryan: "There is an immense acreage of oats going in southwest. All of the winter killed wheat, from Texas to Iowa, is being put into oats under the most favorable conditions."

Larimore, N. D., wired: "It will take ten days more for ground to be in shape for wheat seeding with favorable weather. Much plowing still to be done. We cannot expect much of a crop this year."

Clement-Curtis announce that T. D. O'Brien, formerly with Harris-Winthrop, has become associated with them and will be their floor manager on the board of trade.

Le Count's report to Barrell from Cincinnati said that the general condition of wheat from Liberty to Cincinnati was poor. The crop is late and the stand poor, with 25 to 30 per cent permanently lost.

Receipts inspected Saturday: Wheat, 170 cars; corn, 68 cars; oats, 103 cars; rye, 5 cars; barley, 47 cars. Hogs estimated for Monday, 36,000 head, and for all next week 130,000 head.

Europe is still taking all the provisions for which there is steamer room available, according to W. L. Gregson, and the south is a fair buyer of salt and bacon meats.

Argentine reports on corn situation were unfavorable. Liverpool arrivals were lighter, also causing some further appreciation in spot corn prices.

Hog prices at Chicago yesterday averaged steady with Friday's figures on receipts of 11,500 head. There were occasional sales at slightly better prices and others at values that did not compare so favorably with those of the previous day. Packers again were good buyers and outsiders took hold freely, cleaning up the offerings more closely than for some time. Hogs topped at $9.85, with the bulk at $9.60@9.75. Pigs sold slowly and many were left over unsold, as buyers tried to get them at lower prices than holders were willing to accept.

Final values made hogs largely 25c higher than a week ago, while pigs showed a net gain of 40@50c for the week. Total receipts of approximately 112,000 head sold at an average price of $9.70, compared with $9.00 last week. While receipts for the week showed a decrease of nearly 38,000 head, shipments increased nearly 1,000.

Hog purchases for the day: Armour & Co., 2,400; Swift & Co., 800; Sulzberger & Sons, 800; Morris & Co., 800; Anglo-American, 800; Hammond, 500; Boyd-Lunham, 200; Western Packing company, 1,900; Miller & Hart, 400; Independent Packing company, 500; Brennan Packing company, 1,200; butchers, 1,300; shippers, 2,500; total, 14,100; left over, 1,500.

CATTLE.

With one of the smallest supplies of the season on sale at Chicago this week, the cattle market developed decided strength and prices made upward gains of 40@60c for the bulk of the steers. Cows and heifers advanced 25@40c and the general market closed in a strong position, with practically nothing of killing value left unsold. The trade in stock and feeding steers also developed greater breadth and offerings of desirable kinds cattle cleared freely at an advance of 10@25c for the week. Calf receipts were in excess of those of the previous week, but the demand was more than correspondingly increased and prices made substantial gains. Expectations are for moderate supplies and sustained firmness in the market the coming week owing to the strong situation in the market for dressed beef of all grades.

Prices at seven western markets for the week 96,900, against 141,400 the preceding week, 100,400 a year ago, and 124,400 two years ago. Total for 1916 to date, 2,088,000, against 1,775,000 the same period in 1915.

SHEEP.

Sheep and lamb market finished the week in a healthy condition, although final quotations did not show any material advance from those quoted a week ago. Trade during the week was of good volume, with values tending downward under increased receipts at the beginning of the week and selling steadily upward towards the finish. Receipts for the week increased about 20,000 head and there was a fair increase in the outward movement. Local packers gave the market its chief support, however, and they showed strong preference for lightweight animals, paying higher than at any previous time for fancy lightweight shorn lambs.

More than 600,000 Rail Stockholders.

The discussion now in progress between the railway managers of the country and the unions over the question of wages gives some striking illustrations of the general habit of ignoring security holders. The small stockholder is, as a rule, about the last person whose affairs interest the railway managers. In the present controversy, however, the managers referred to the fact that the interstate commerce commission had reported a total of 622,284 holders of railway shares.

The answer to this statement was in line with the prevalent ideas about railroads and their securities. The union officials cited the fact that many great railway companies own the shares of subsidiaries and added, "to a very considerable extent the stock of the American railroads is owned by the railroads themselves." Probably most people, including stockholders, would accept that view of the subject as substantially correct.

The truth is that the amount of these railway owned stocks is relatively small, and, further, such shares are represented by stocks or bonds of the holding companies outstanding in the hands of the public. The exact figures for June 30, 1914, are as follows: Total railway stock outstanding, $8,680,759,704; total owned by railroads, $2,638,783,512.

Of the whole number of 622,284 stockholders reported by the interstate commission evidently only an insignificant fraction can be railway corporations even if every one of the 528 railroads involved in the present discussion holds stock in ten others. The rest of the stockholders number certainly more than 600,000, and they own $6,041,976,192 par value of stock.

The vast majority of the stockholders are small investors. Is there any reason why they should not organize and let it be known that they exist and have the same right to an income from their property as that enjoyed by an equal number of real estate owners? Of course, the question of wages of the 400,000 railway employes should be decided on its own merits. Then if the award threatens to make a reduction in dividends the 600,000 stockholders should be prepared to ask and obtain permission from the interstate commerce commission to raise rates enough to make up the deficiency.

Georgia Railway and Power.

H. J. R., Evansville, Ind.—The Georgia Railway and Power company is a consolidation formed four years ago. It showed a steady increase of earnings till last year, when the effects of jitney competition in Atlanta and hard times all over the south caused a falling off. Last autumn the jitney competition practically ceased and sales of current for lighting and power began to show good gains. Gross earnings for the nine months ended Sept. 30 were $4,993,457, an increase of $29,410. Net was $1,947,899, a gain of $51,612. There are $3,903,000 of underlying bonds $9,900,000 of first and refunding, and $634,419 debentures. Interest, rents, and sinking fund charges amounted to $2,209,206 in 1914, and if they were at the same rate last year net

NEW YORK BANK RESERVE SHOWS HEAVIEST LOSS

Call on Anglo-French Bonds Pulls Reserve Down to Low Figure of Month.

The New York bank statement showed a loss of $24,775,110 in surplus reserve. That the figures for the week would be unusual was expected, because of calling for deposits in connection with the purchase of the Anglo-French bonds. While the surplus fell away the amount indicated, "demand deposits" increased over $21,000,000 and loans more than $29,500,000.

But whatever the cause, the surplus reserve fell below $100,000,000, the low point in months. The figures follow:

NEWS OF THE FINANCIAL WORLD.

Accompanying the advance in United States Smelting stock, which was listed on The New York stock exchange last month, is a report that an extra dividend is to be declared. Verification is lacking. A special meeting would have to be called for the purpose, since the next dividend meeting is scheduled for June. The fact that earnings are much in excess of dividend requirements is leading to somewhat enthusiastic predictions as to what stockholders will get this year. Boston interests are quoted as bullish.

It is understood two plans will be suggested at the meeting of Union Bag and Paper shareholders at their meeting April 11, looking toward a reduction in the capital stock. One plan will be to reduce the outstanding common to $10,000,000 and issue $1,000,000 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock. The other plan is to issue $8,000,000 of both classes of stock, the preferred shareholders to waive their right to accumulated dividends.

The market had another day under submarine influence. It was weak until near the close of the session, when a large volume of buying in American Zinc stock and Butte and Superior shares started an upturn that ended with prices near the best of the day. But in a general way the market was listless. There is not much to be said until the situation changes.

The boosters of Chevrolet motor stock point out that the shares have advanced from 85 last October, when the concern was organized, to 190½ yesterday morning, with a rise of 31 points within the last week. Earnings are declared to be well over $600,000 per month after liberal charges.

It is reported that the White Motor company has closed a contract with the Russian government for 2,000 motor trucks. These average in price about $2,500, so that the order involves a gross business of around $5,000,000. Deliveries are to be completed in the current year.

Sales of the F. W. Woolworth company in March were $6,246,634, a gain of $474,-876, or 8.22 per cent. The first quarter of 1916 showed sales of $16,244,149, a gain of $1,718,400, or 11.79 per cent, over the corresponding period last year.

It develops that the United Fruit company is the American steamship line which has contracted with the Mexican Petroleum company for the 1,000,000 barrels of fuel oil recently announced.

The Independent Drug company reports increases in sales for the first quarter of the year 1916 over 1915 of 78.6 per cent and thus far in April a proportionate increase.

The final Guggenheim Exploration distribution is to be $11.85 in cash and one-quarter share of Yukon Alaska Trust for each share of Guggenheim Exploration.

Thomson & McKinnon announce that Archibald W. Houston, formerly with Harris, Winthrop & Co., has become associated with their firm.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul has closed a contract for 120 all steel flat cars, to be used in moving heavy agricultural machinery.

The Tidewater Oil company, one of the Standard Oil subsidiaries, has increased its capital by $5,000,000, from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000.

An exporting firm announces it has received an order for 20,000,000 pounds of tobacco.

British imports in March increased $53,-150,000 while exports increased $37,100,000.

IS THIS "UNSWERVING NEUTRALITY?"—On January 27, the anniversary of the birth of the Kaiser, Constantine, King of the Hellenes, attended a celebration given by the German colony in Athens at the Philadelphia club in the Rue Homere. On the occasion he wore his uniform as a Prussian field marshal and the insignia of the various military honors conferred upon him in times of peace by his brother-in-law, the Kaiser. He is seen here leaving the club after the fete. The picture, which was purchased by The Tribune from the Paris Miroir, appeared in that magazine without comment, although it is said that the publication aroused some anxiety in France as to King Constantine's stated policy of "unswerving neutrality." Besides his title of Prussian field marshal, King Constantine holds the posts of chief of Prussian infantry regiment No. 88, member of the staff of the Second regiment of Prussian footguards, and member of the staff of the First regiment of Russian infantry of Neva.

JAPANESE OFFICERS AT VERDUN—This picture, one of the first to reach this country of the operations about Verdun, shows some of the Japanese officers, delegated to investigate the French army methods, watching the operations of the French army at Verdun. About them is desolation wrought by battle. The Japanese are wearing the French steel helmets. These staff observers of the Mikado are constantly at the front in France, seldom being seen in Paris. VERDUN—These two pictures are from the scene of what may be rated as one of the great battles in history, the battle of Verdun. In one picture is shown the French using a tall tree for observation purposes. The topmost man is " disguised " as a branch. The other picture shows one of the many marshes of Champeneuville, which increased the difficulties of attacking the great fortress.

THE NEW VICEROY OF INDIA—Lord Chelmsford, a well trained and popular British publicist, has assumed the semi-royal responsibility of governing Great Britain's wealthiest colonial possession. SOME IMAGES OF SOME IMAGISTS—Grouped in this picture are the principal poets of America with three visitors from England. The photograph was made at a poet's dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York. John Masefield, who looks as though he had sneaked in or had found somebody else's watch in his waistcoat pocket, is really the guest of honor. The expansive lady is Miss Amy Lowell, sister of the president of Harvard, one of Boston's wealthiest women and one of America's leading imagists. She recited one of her poems, "The Springtime Bath," in Chicago not long ago, one line of which ran, "Little spots of sunshine lie on the surface of the water and dance, dance, and their reflections wabble deliciously over the ceiling; a stir of my finger sets them whirring, reeling. I lie back and laugh and let the green-white water, the sun flawed, beryl water, flow over me." Standing from left to right are: Lawrence Housman, Witter Bynner, Percy Mackaye, Edwin Markham, Cale Young Rice, Louis Untermeyer, and Vachel Lindsay. Sitting, left to right, are: Miss Lowell, Josephine Daskam Bacon, Mr. Masefield, and Alfred Noyes. (Photogrph copyright by Paul Thompson.)

The Aftermath

By Champ Clark

Speaker of the House of Representatives

CONGRESS shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.—First Amendment to the Constitution.

IT goes without saying that free speech is one of our most priceless heritages—and one that always has been and must be jealously safeguarded. But the tendency of the American people to confuse free speech and loose talk has never been more pronounced than at the present time. Its rampant indulgence is at once disquieting and amazing, concerning itself chiefly, of course, with the European-Asiatic-African war and the aftermath thereof.

It is with the aftermath of the war that the following observations are concerned. The prophets of disaster are in their element when making themselves and other timid folks miserable by conjuring up the dire calamities that will befall the United States at the close of the trouble across the seas. They cannot deny our present unprecedented prosperity, in which everybody ought to take pleasure, but which many loose thinkers and talkers seem to take as a personal grievance. They are the skeletons at our feast and prophesy adversity with an unction which shows that they hope for the evils which they foretell.

Item. While admitting most reluctantly that every factory of every sort in all this spacious land is running over time and making profits unheard of till now, they solemnly asseverate that so soon as the war ends, Europe will ruin all American manufacturers by the simple process of dumping her surplus wares upon us. Who can sanely accept or be disturbed by such a false conclusion? Who can believe that at the close of this war Europe will happen to have a surplus of anything except ruin and sorrow with which to jeopardize American prosperity and the welfare of the Republic? Anybody who thinks carefully and has a modicum of vision must foresee that Europe, instead of being burdened with a surplus of wares and merchandise, being in fact afflicted with a painful shortage in respect to such, will, when the war is over, be busy trying to supply wares and merchandise to its own people.

ITEM. Many of our people view with grave apprehension the prospect of a vastly increased immigration into this country when peace is established beyond the seas—which is another figment of imagination. The chances are that the immigration into this country for a decade, perhaps for a generation, will be negligible; for good and sufficient reasons. Because so many have been killed, crippled or incapacitated by disease, by exposure in camp, on the march or in the field, the prospect is that every man or woman desiring employment at home will be able to find it at a higher wage than heretofore. Therefore and thereby the temptation to emigrate will be diminished. Many persons seem to think that the only reason why immigrants come to America is because they desire to live in a Republic. No doubt that is the reason why many do come hither, but many others—a majority perhaps—come because of the greater rewards for labor, whether skilled or unskilled, whether of brain or of brawn. It is confidently submitted that both these motives are rational and honorable. These two classes embrace the bulk of the immigrants to American shores, not to mention the comparatively few who flee from religious or political persecutions and others who, like the Knight of La Mancha, come in quest of ventures. It is safe to say that ninety-five per cent of all who emigrate from Europe leave the land of their birth with regret—a regret inherent in human nature itself and honorable to the human heart.

It is also safe to say that if the rewards of toil are even approximately equal in their own country and in another, most folks the wide world over prefer to stay in their native land, amid the scenes of childhood and in company with kindred and friends. It is not to Americans alone that the anthem, "Home Sweet Home," appeals, but to all the people of the earth.

WHEN this stupendous conflict closes laborers of every kind will be so scarce in the belligerent countries that wages are as certain to rise in them as the sun is to shine, and just as wages increase so emigration will decrease. It is bound to be so. It cannot be otherwise.

Not more than two cases need be advanced to sustain the conclusion as to reduced immigration into this country.

The first mighty army of our immigrants came from Ireland because of the hard conditions prevailing at home, particularly as to religious freedom, education, rents and ownership of land. Almost exactly in proportion as conditions have improved in Ireland, the Irish have ceased to emigrate—for no people are more ardent lovers of their native land.

Following the vast Irish immigration came that of the Germans, vaster still. Until some thirty or forty years ago our principal supply of immigrants came from Germany. When the present war began the great stream of German immigrants had dwindled almost to the vanishing point. What was the reason for this shrinkage? It is clear that it was because the great industrial awakening of Germany—one of the most astounding phenomena of modern times—gave employment at home to hundreds of thousands at higher wages in new kinds of work. That was among the chief of the herculean labors Bismarck performed for his country. Germans found employment at home at more remunerative wages than were obtainable prior to the great industrial awakening, and the number of immigrants from the Fatherland grew constantly smaller, year by year, until it practically ceased altogether.

I repeat that that was one of the main benefactions which Bismarck wrought for Germany; for it made her one of the foremost manufacturing and exporting nations of the globe. And the truth is that no statesman or leader of men ever worked more persistently and industriously at any self-imposed task than the Kaiser Wilhelm II has labored to increase the manufactures and exports of Germany.

QUERY: If improved conditions as to the rewards of labor in Ireland and Germany, whence so many of our most desirable immigrants came in the earlier day, diminished the emigration from those countries, why is not the same result likely to happen in the present warring nations?

So it seems that instead of our country being swamped by a tremendous host of immigrants, the Anti-Immigration Society is likely to find itself in the condition of Othello, for its "occupation will be gone."

Designed and Described by Jack Manley Rosé and Grace Norton Rosé

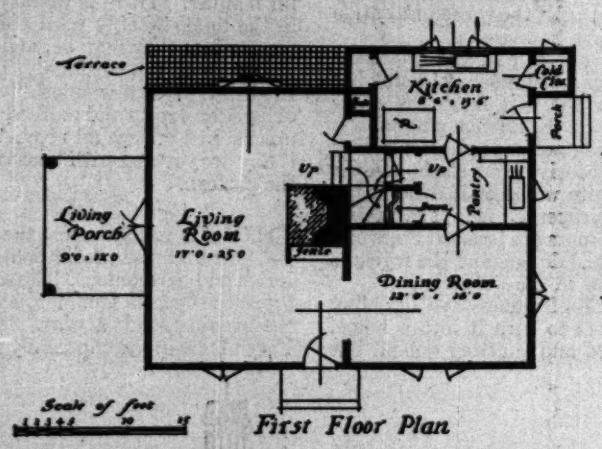
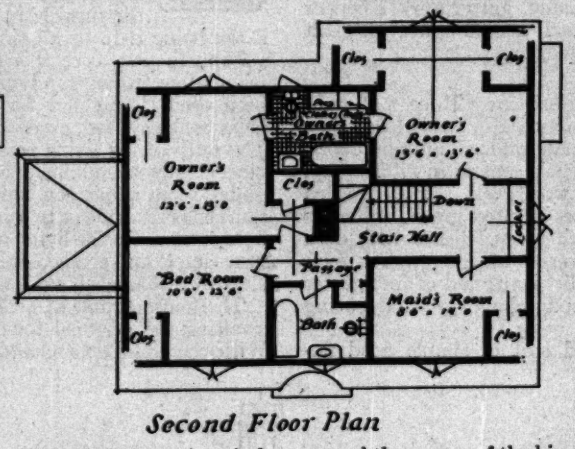
ONE may know nothing of Early Gothic or Renaissance architecture, and yet be sure in a moment whether the appearance of a house is pleasing or not. Very likely the reader may be one of those sensible Americans who says, to the aggravation of the artist who overhears, "I don't know much about this period stuff, but I know what I like when I see it!" But at any rate it is assumed that he or she is familiar with Colonial architecture in some of its aspects.

In designing this house, we have adopted, generally speaking, the Dutch Colonial style of architecture, but have not adhered at all slavishly to it in detail. The big factors are there, the main points to make up the seemly appearance of the whole. Living porches, paved terraces, and French windows are hardly considered pure Colonial; but who would live without them if one could have them all incorporated in an attractive little house of inconsiderable cost?

There is no shoddiness about the house, no cheap makeshifts, or use of stunts to cover poor construction. The dwelling has character, dignity and a certain elegance. It may be built in a carefully restricted neighborhood and compare favorably with much more costly homes. It is not a cottage; it is a residence in the best sense of the word.



First Floor Plan



Second Floor Plan

Painted a creamy white, warm in the shadows and glowing in the sunlight, set in its surrounding greenery, with moss-green shingled roof and blue-green shutters, this little home will have exceptional charm. There is no style of architecture being tried out today with the attractiveness or the same lasting appeal that obtains in the revival of the types used by the early builders of this country.

As to the distinct advantages of this particular house: the arched hood over the stoop gives an elaboration to the entrance that greatly enhances the appearance of the whole. The side porch is square and roomy as a comfortable living porch should be. The elaborate center chimney is a rather unusual feature and gives the house more balance than a single outside chimney would, while costing considerably less than two flanking chimneys. On the garden side of the house is laid a paved terrace, accessible by French windows from the living room. The service end is amply provided with porch and outside cold closet. All the windows are of the casement type. So much for the exterior.

The interior is divided, as the plans show, into two floors with only storage space on the third. A cellar is provided for, but is not shown in the plans. It is noticeable that the main stairs do not show from the front door or formal entrance. As these stairs lead so directly to the sleeping quarters of the family and are not for the use of the casual visitor there is no need to adhere to the customary plan of having them so in evidence. The settle, cutting off the family fireside, also lends seclusion to the living room though no attempt has been made to provide a separate entry. Big clear spaces have been made the keynote of the interior, the designer believing that one spacious room is worth three small ones. There is a dining room, so located as to accentuate the feeling of openness and spaciousness. The living porch extends this idea and in winter may be glassed-in and heated. Even the terrace across the end of the living room, set with tea tables and lounging chairs and overlooking the gardens at the close of the warm days, may easily tempt one to overflow the house in that direction.

Observe particularly that the stairs wind up around the corner of the big chimney. The back stairs from the pantry turn on the landing and merge. The pantry has the approved location, between the kitchen and the dining room. The laundry is in the cellar, and outside steps lead directly up to the drying yard. In the cellar, of course, is the furnace room, the coal and wood bins, and also a servants' toilet and a trunk room.

On the bedroom floor the arrangement is suited to the needs of the average small family, with or without one maid. The two main bedrooms have southern exposures and a combination bath room and dressing room between them. Of the two other rooms, the smaller one is intended for the maid. There is a second bath room, an unusual feature in such a small house, but one to be appreciated. The stair hall is spacious and open, with white spindles and a mahogany rail. Mahogany finished chamber doors, framed in white trim, add to the general attractiveness.

THIS HOME

The Cost in Detail

GETTING down to brass tacks in the matter of cost and practical features of construction, the figures quoted are given by a contractor in the suburban section of New York and hold good in that locality. There will be more or less fluctuation, according to location, but the price of labor and material in the vicinity of New York is higher than in many other sections. The figure covers first-class work and first-class material. The allowance for carpentry means all that it implies and aside from the actual construction allows for the following features:

Parquet floors in living room and dining room. Hard pine in pantry and kitchen. Single hard pine floors in bedrooms and one bathroom. Wainscoting waist high with panel-ing worked out with mouldings in dining room. Book shelves in living room where directed. Closet shelves where directed. Main stairway oak. Settle to screen fireplace, with locker underneath. Pantry shelves. White pine front door. Cold air box. Partition in cellar. Laundry platform in cellar. Cellar hatchway. Clothes press of drawers in bathroom. Clothes chute from owner's bath to cellar. Locker in stair hall. Delicate spindle balustrade with mahogany rail. Attic scuttle and folding staircase.

The mason's figures cover, besides the ordinary lath and plastering, cost of excavation, foundation of hollow tile, tiled terrace, areas, cellar floor and steps, hard finish of Keene's cement in closet, Keene's cement tiled off on kitchen walls and one bathroom, one completely tiled bathroom and chimney. All walls to be finished in smooth white or rough grey sand effect, as preferred.

The plumber for his estimate, besides furnishing good quality fixtures throughout including toilet and laundry tubs in cellar not shown on plans, does all the necessary flashing and tinning, gutter work, a copper roof on the front stoop hood, installing heating plant complete and necessary piping.

THE painting specifications cover three-coat work inside and out, of creamy white enamel finish on interior woodwork and mahoganized interior doors, stair treads and rail. Keene's cement in kitchen and bathroom to be treated as woodwork. Floors finished as owner desires. Shutters painted green. Shingles stained moss green. Porch floors finished with deck paint, likewise canvas covering on living porch roof. All tin coated with metallic paint, and copper gutter and leaders and front hood colored green by being treated with dilute acid.

The electric wiring and cost of simple good fixtures and installing is taken care of in the figures quoted.

No allowance has been made for grading or planting the grounds. The entire appropriation has been put into the house itself. But do not neglect this important factor. Long before the house is complete, during the months when it seems to grow so slowly, and all the work is on the inside finishing, it will be well to consider this matter of the grounds. Today no one is content to rear a bare house, raw and unsoftened, with only a well-raked dirt field to cover the litter. Take into careful consideration the general axis of the house, front approaches, service paths, the sunny location for the vegetable and flower gardens. All these things and many more are carefully thought out in the little diagram shown in the back of this issue.

The Living Room—Looking into the Dining Room

The Treatment of the Interior

IT IS all very well to give careful thought to the planning of your home and the arrangement of its rooms; but why stop there? Not less important are the matters of painting, wall treatment, the location of heating and lighting fixtures, and the furnishing. All these need attention if the home is to be all that is desired.

Suppose you have this house, and the attendant tribulations are over. Ivory white enamel paint has been used throughout for the first floor, the doors being mahoganized, except in the kitchen and pantry. The walls of the living room are papered in a silvery blue, closely resembling expensive grass cloth; and the dining room above the white wainscot is done in the same color, a shade or two deeper in tone. The electric light fixtures for the living room are brushed brass of a very simple and good colonial design, and the registers are white enameled, set low in the walls.

The house stands in all its freshness and harmony awaiting the personal touch to turn it into a home. With the front door closed and shutting out all but the intimacy of the home interior, fancy just how charming it all will look.

Across the expanse of polished floor, broken by dull-toned rugs, of which rich effects among the domestic weaves may be obtained, and mirroring the sunlight that streams in through the glass doors to the living porch, is a glowing vista of outdoor beauty framed by the rich and quiet elegance of the living room walls. The terrace doors, too, show a glimpse of the colorful garden beyond. The windows are curtained with sheer white scrim, shirred close, top and bottom, on the window sash and overhung with a drapery of silky blue sunfast material of heavy weight. The blue walls are unadorned save by an old gilded mirror or two, that reflects charming bits of color here and there, and imparts a feeling of spaciousness, a few good pictures and the prettily shaded side lights.

The furniture of the living room is for the greater part mahogany, and though it may be of different periods, it should harmonize in a homelike and cheerful manner. There is dignity and comfort combined in the unmistakably good pieces gathered here. Reproductions they may be, and yet have all the charming lines of the antique. There is a handblocked English linen in a wonderfully attractive combination of blues and roses and mulberry reds on a white ground upholstered on several pieces of furniture. The other chairs are covered with blue velour and act as a foil to the pattern.

BITS of porcelain repeat the blue here and there, and blue and rose predominate in the rugs. The effect is rich and harmonious. The sofa at a cozy angle to the fireplace suggests lounging, and the lamp behind it in the evening sheds a warm flood of light for reading. Easy chairs invite the family to the heart of the home—the hearthside. The gate-legged table holds another soft shaded lamp and completes the circle.

The rather unusual desk under the side light suggests home atmosphere without too great informality. Here the mistress of the house keeps her house accounts and writes her social notes. It is not a work-a-day desk, but is at once ornamental and useful, in that it may be closed, and once shut not even look the part to carry any suggestion of stuffed pigeonholes hastily covered up. The gilt of the mirror frame is repeated in the hearth furnishings, the fender, the English trivet and the andirons, and also in the brass candlesticks on the mantle. The furniture is uncrowded; there are few pieces and those arranged for comfort and utility. There is an air of simplicity and welcome.

Looking toward the dining room one finds a still lighter note prevailing. Delft blue and white makes this room as dainty and appealing as a room could be. The white painted furniture, with embellishing clusters of quaint garden flowers, is novel and distinctly restful. It has the advantage of being inexpensive and when one reckons the cost of dining-room pieces, this speaks in its favor. With a few day's labor a cheap and commonplace set can be transformed into a thing of beauty from this suggestion. A friend who paints china could put the finishing touches on each piece. Runners, cross-stitched and square doilies with the same little flowery garlands are used on the table, or a luncheon cloth more elaborately ornamented with lace and embroidery motifs. If the family outgrows the present confines of this little home, this set would be equally appropriate on the breakfast porch, and a more dignified one be purchased for the dining room grown more formal. But in a house of such simplicity this note of cottage demureness is charming. The whole house in its dress of white paint suggests cheerful daintiness and wholesome living.

THE large living room alone with its French windows and its low ceiling lines is toned down to a becoming decorousness by the use of draperies and dark dull-polished furniture. Up the little stairs, with their slender spindles and mahogany rail, a burst of light greets one from the double hall window.

The two rooms facing the garden are undoubtedly the best rooms to live in. Do not try to keep one of them for the guest room. Give the guest the best guest room by all means, but do not relegate the cheerful, big bedroom to intermittent use. The smaller front room can be made every bit as attractive to the visitor.

Checked linen is a color much favored for bedroom garnishing though tinted stripes are always orderly and conventional. Whether the guest room shall attract instantly by its dainty, fluffy appeal, or by its quiet reposeful charm, or its rich and colorful tone, is a merely personal matter.

White enamelled furniture of the cottage type, and cretonne hangings sprinkled with tiny prim yellow roses and green leafage, would be the foundation for a charming room. Ruffled under-curtains of muslin, yellow satin puffs on the beds, the cretonne pattern under plate glass on the dresser, yellow shades on the lights and a cushion or two would create a cheerful picture.

Orchid stripes and French grey painted furniture would make a restful room, as would mahogany low four-poster style beds and furniture to correspond, with blue and white rag rugs, white curtains and bedspread of old quilted pattern in blue and greens on a white field.

Grey walls with one of the new black lacquered bedroom sets ornamented in gold or brilliant colors also make an effective combination, and can be worked out with restrained severity or rich sumptuousness.

Or, a good effect can be obtained with white enamelled furnishings with cane panels, putty colored hangings and rug, and a touch of burnt orange here and there to warm the whole. English linen, patterned in large green checks, will give tone to a room however indifferent may be the furniture. Slip covers on a chair or two, a bolster sham, over curtains, dresser scarfs, a couch cover and pillow slips of this material, and a mossgreen rug in two tones will at small cost create a room of character.

One of the bathrooms in this house is tiled, the other has a hard, Keene's cement finish carried shoulder high This should be treated preferably with a fine high gloss enamel paint. If this high gloss effect is not desired on the other wood work in the house, the last coat can be rubbed to give it a dull finish. If you are wise, you will nevertheless adhere to the glossy surface for the bathrooms, pantry and kitchens, as the ease with which paint of this character may be wiped down is a great point in its favor. With shining porcelain fixtures, the whole place presents that spotless, glistening appearance, that is hard to achieve except with expensive tiling.

The large tiled bathroom located between the master bedrooms is an attractive feature. A built-in chest of drawers furnishes places for linen and the storing of odds and ends. In this chest is the laundry chute which carries the soiled clothes direct to the laundry in the cellar, with an opening in the kitchen to receive the service linen. The closet space is unusually ample, each master bedroom boasting two closets. In fact the wardrobe room was primarily considered in the construction of this house, instead of being casually fitted in wherever the space could be snatched.

The sloping roof involves lost head room in each of the four corners of the house, and the corner areas are utilized as closet space for the two other rooms as well. This makes a deep receding hanging room with full head room where the door is located.

There seems to be a fixed idea, among Americans particularly, that their bedrooms should be square sided with no jogs. Just why this notion obtains is a mystery to those who have enjoyed the placing of furniture in the odd shaped room. The beds can frequently be set in a jog or alcove in a room of unsymmetrical plan, and instead of jutting out into the center of the floor space, be kept in the background. It helps create a vista, also, and makes the room seem larger than a square one of similar area.

BY means of the gambrel roof used on this building, the same amount of available space may be obtained more cheaply than by other construction, and the outward thrust on the walls is not nearly as great as with a pitch roof.

The upstairs hall is a feature of this house. It is light and bright and wide. The locker seat under the double casement windows, if made wider and fitted with springs, cushions and heaps of pillows would make an ideal lounging nook.

If once you have lived in a house of painted white woodwork, and realized its cheeriness, its daintiness and its charm, the dark wood finishes will have lost their appeal. A Jacobean room with costly paneling and suitable furnishings may be of sombre richness, but it hardly belongs in a small house of moderate cost.

Cheaper wood, stained, and less of it, does not give the same elaborate effect, and for staining in any case, a wood with a beautiful grain is absolutely essential. This is undeniably expensive and means that if used as an interior finish, a big percentage of the cost of the house must go into the trim when it had better be applied to the general construction. As poplar, a white wood and soft, is commonly used in the Eastern states for painting, a fine result at considerably less cost may be obtained.

Note on the ground floor plan the cellar stairs going down from the pantry and the short flight of back stairs beside them leading to the landing.

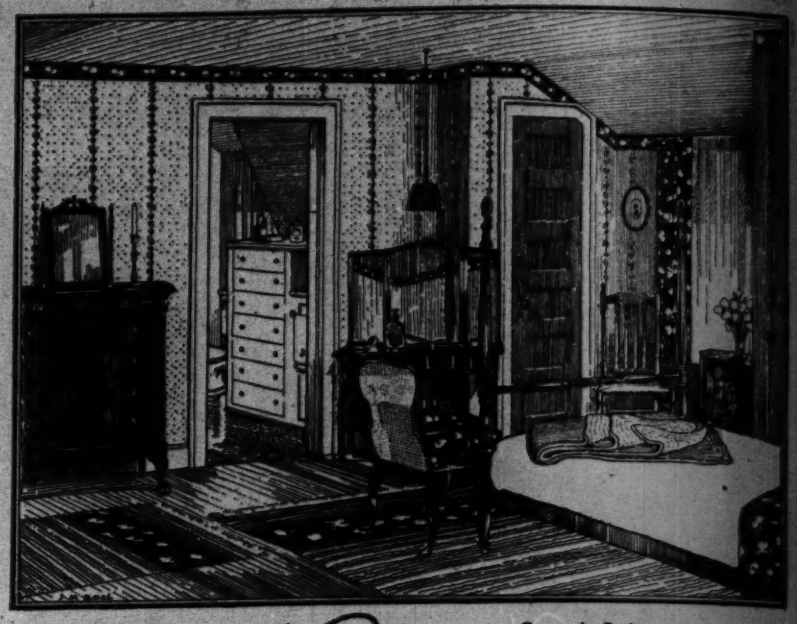
The Nursery



Owner's Bedroom

The Model Nursery

OF ALL the rooms in the house, none deserves more care and consideration in its planning than the nursery. Perhaps the most used, and certainly the most abused of all the upper chambers, it is frequently made the least attractive.

It is extremely difficult to strike the medium between hospital severity and over-fussiness in this room. Dainty it should be; but to how many does daintiness mean the sheen of pale satin, filmy nets and costly embroidered knicknacks! There is another daintiness, however, and more to be recommended to the average mother; the daintiness of perfect simplicity. Any mother can achieve this with a few yards of washable material, the generous use of enamel paint and the selection of strictly utilitarian furnishing. Excellent quality wicker work, firm woven, white enameled and washable, may not be quite as easily cared for as plainer surfaces, but it mars less and lasts much longer. For a very soft and restful effect, deep ivory or pale grey enamel may be used instead of the pure white, as sets of this sort can be obtained in any desired finish.

The Adam style of furniture is recommended on account of its pale tints, its delicate mouldings and its extreme daintiness. The crib belonging to this style is elaborate enough for the most fastidious. The little dresser has a plate glass top, a series of tiny drawers with silk quilted pads in them, and a wardrobe section equipped with an extension rod and little hangers to hold all the tiny garments. The standing wicker lamp, which casts a subdued light, serves an excellent purpose for the early months. A bright lamp stands on the dresser. There are chairs to match and delicate water colors for the wall.

An indefinite pink or blue may be there, with a much ruffled silk and lacy bassinet, prominently placed among some discarded furnishings from other rooms; but seldom is the place hygienically suited to the needs of the important occupant.

In short, one may readily obtain everything necessary to give a pure Adam style of furnishing to the nursery.

The blue-bird is a harbinger of happiness, it is said, and all the up-to-date shops, by the same token, are carrying in stock wicker furnishings, embellished with these delicately tinted birds and tiny garlands of roses. Like the pure Adam design, this is apt to prove costly, but it is unmistakably artistic and is well worth the outlay provided it can be afforded.

In the illustration is shown just how good an effect may be secured by the selection of furniture somewhat unrelated, not too severely hygienic, and suited to the growing demands of the child. As the child becomes more active the standing lamp may be removed and other small furniture added.

Front Entrance and Approach

The casement windows have dotted Swiss curtains shirred on rods fastened close to the window panes. As the windows push out, a dark green shade might be made to pull down over the double casement to darken the room, as the curtain only softens the light. The rugs are washable and not too large and can be fastened to the floor at the corners if desired.

Of course the walls of a model nursery should be painted, but if paper is preferred there is a water proof kind that comes especially for this purpose and can easily be wiped down.

THE illustration shows a painted wall with a frieze running around the room, just under the toy shelf. A long, low box, covered with washable material with a hinged lid, set under the windows, does duty as a seat or a play table, and holds either toys or clothing. There should be a cot or couch besides the bassinet and a threefold screen is always convenient. The chairs, of different sizes, are identical in design. The clothes tree will be found convenient while the child is being dressed, and can be set inside the closet at other times. In the bathroom adjoining may be kept the scales, the nursery chair, the clothes hamper, the clothes horse, the covered pail and other necessary but not strictly attractive factors in the equipment of a model nursery.

For the average family, the heads of which have foresight and the love of children, no room in the home demands more thought and careful planning in the matter of location and furnishing than the nursery. It has been appropriately called the cradle of civilization—and upon its success, as a domicile for the little folks in their most plastic years depends to an unimaginable extent their health and the shaping of ultimate character. Time and thought are never wasted in planning this room.

Rounding Out the Home

CONSIDER the living room and its advantages from the housekeeping viewpoint. That it can be thoroughly ventilated in all directions is a distinct asset. Imagine this attractive room on one of those spring days when a soft mild air barely stirs the faint green of the garden, and the earth lies fallow under a cloudless sky. Then are all the doors and windows flung wide, the glare tempered by drawn shades or awnings. It is dim and cool within doors, orderly and restful. Out of the French windows leading to the side piazza are stretches of lawn, and hedge. There is a lilac bush flushed with a faint purple, a shrub shaking down its golden bells on the fair new grass, and beyond a billowy mass of fruit trees drifted into bloom.

THE hard-wood floors are easily wiped up. The rugs are small and no great weight to lift about. The terrace affords a dry, open place upon which to clean them. Far better than a covered porch which tends to retain the dust. There is a roomy closet adjacent to the stairs, and near the entrance to the terrace. This is the place for heavy cloaks, rainy day wraps, rubbers, umbrellas, and garden tools.

The dining room is bright and airy and the two corner cupboards indicated will hold a wealth of choice china not to be entrusted to the open pantry shelves. The pantry has plenty of light and space enough to hold all the dining room service, cake boxes, bread boxes, and such preserves and supplies as require a warm, dry atmosphere. The stairs to the landing are here, also those leading to the cellar, and directly beyond is the kitchen.

Now for the kitchen! It has a built-in closet or kitchen cabinet, as may be desired, and it can be made to hold everything that need be covered. A plate rail should run around the walls, just wide enough to hold spice, seasonings, plates on edge, etc., and allow cups and utensils to swing from the underside. The clean and shining gas range is flanked by a table, and the sink and its counters and drain board are directly under the mullioned window where the light is strongest. The cold closet holds the ice-box and is well shelved, and there is a little porch at the glass-paneled back door. The specifications call for hard cement finish lined off into tiles, from the baseboard to the plate rail. If this has been painted white and finished with a coat of high gloss enamel, not only will the effect be that of tiling at a smaller cost, but the sanitary advantages will be exactly the same.

Upstairs is a wide, bright hall. The lockered seat and the linen closet mean much to the average woman. The bedroom suite and large private bathroom give a suggestion of luxurious living rarely found in the small house. If there are young (Continued on next page)

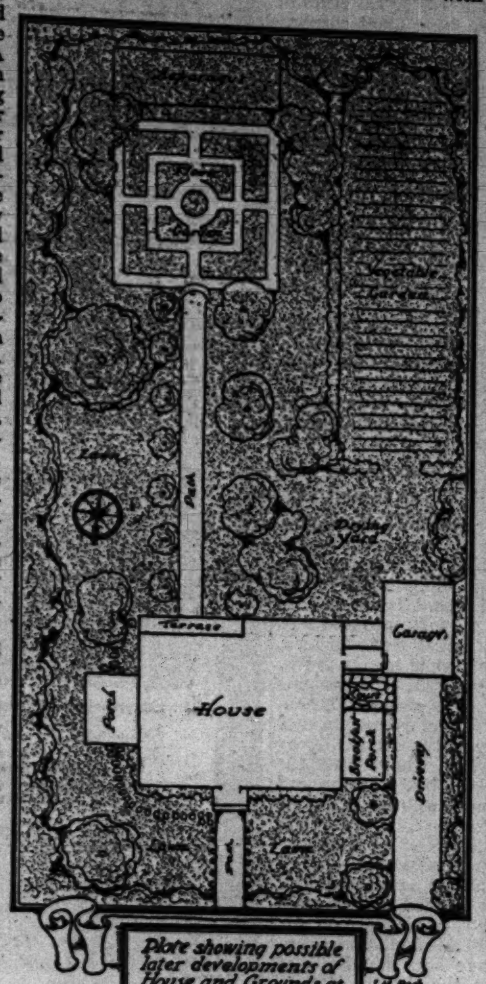
Further Development

THIS house has been arranged as a unit, complete in itself but capable of being easily and practicably enlarged, a feature often overlooked by the home builder. A breakfast porch off the dining room, either glassed in or open, could easily be constructed. The cold closet, by being enlarged could be made to serve as well as a passage to an attached garage, heated from the house plant. Over the garage quarters could be made for a man, or a bachelor guest room. By enlarging the kitchen, an alcove for servants' table or a breakfast alcove for the family could be introduced.

If a sleeping porch is desired, cut down one of the little high windows of the bedroom on the porch side, and so make access to the flat roof that is already railed in. Also a room could be furnished off in the attic space and adequate stairs made to that third floor through the center closet, with little additional expense. Over the suggested breakfast porch a small extra bedroom could be managed with entrance through half of what is now the hall window.



Plote showing possible later developments of House and Grounds at slight additional cost, consisting of Breakfast Porch Garage & Planting Scheme

The French windows giving onto the paved terrace could be made the means of communication with another room, a dining room, for instance, and the present dining room made into a library or reception room. Another serving pantry could be easily arranged at the end of the kitchen near the living room, and the present pantry thrown into the kitchen. Another use for the present dining room and adjoining pantry might be to close them off from access, except from the stair landing, and make them into servants' quarters with bathroom; building the service end further out into the rear and constructing a small reception hall by the front door.

Since no house is considered at all complete without gardens, there is shown a possible plot development of this home. Surely it isn't too much to ask that this matter of planting may be considered along with the house. Many wise people of today defer their building until their grounds are made ready and a certain amount of shrubbery and trees have been set out and firmly established.

Rounding Out the Home

children the arrangement is particularly desirable, because one of these rooms might then be used as a nursery. In the bathroom, the built-in chest of drawers suggests excellent storage space. Each of these rooms has two closets.

The other two rooms are well lighted, ventilated and closeted. It is also possible to contrive a sleeping porch by cutting down a window from either one of the master rooms, or else from the room designated as a guest room. There is a little folding ladder that shuts up into the scuttle that should be included in the specifications. This is a great space-saver and a very clever contrivance by which the attic space may be made easily accessible.

Lastly there are many small matters in which the housekeeper should interest herself while the house is building. She should supervise the shelving in the closets, the hanging of the doors, and indicate in which direction she wishes them to swing. It is often advisable not to follow the plans too closely in matters of this sort. Many changes can be worked in during the course of construction that, made later, would involve considerable trouble and expense.

Father's Peril

By Walter G. Doty

JUST three or four time-yellowed pages, in an old colonial diary. How the manuscript came into my possession is immaterial. But here are two paragraphs:

"February ye tenth, 1628. This day a most terrible thing happened to Father. It hath been a long, cold winter, and ye members of our little colony have suffered grievously, supplies being scant. Our larder being well-nigh bare, my goodly Father started forth in search of game. Of late it hath grown exceeding difficult to obtain powder and lead. Father had but one charge left for his trusty blunderbuss; but, being a famous shot, he had no doubt that this would prove sufficient to bring down some wild creature, that the household might be supplied with meat.

"He had wandered some way from ye settlement when he sighted a wild turkey perched on a limb. Drawing near he took aim. At this moment a skulking savage leaped from behind a tree near by. An arrow hurtled past dear Father's head, barely missing him. Quickly he turned his blunderbuss upon ye savage and prepared to fire. But ye thought came to him that his wife and children were in dire straits for food. Having but the one shot, what should he do? To slay ye savage would mean that ye turkey would escape. To shoot ye turkey would place Father at ye mercy of ye cruel Redskin. Momentarily he hesitated, but suddenly determining upon a bold course he took steady aim, fired and slew ye——"

Here the manuscript breaks off. I'm sorry that I ever ran across the confounded thing.

The Standardized Upholstery Material

Standardization has revolutionized the motor car industry. It has increased manufacturing efficiency and lowered selling costs. It has given the manufacturer methods and materials of definite proved quality and insured the motor car buyer the maximum of value.

Of the million autos sold in 1916, 75% will sell at $1000.00 or under and this remarkable achievement is the direct result of standardization.

To this revolutionary process of standardization Du Pont Fabrikoid Motor Quality adds the final word in upholstery. It eliminates the buying hazard, the high cost and the manufacturing wastes of leather because it gives the manufacturer an upholstery material of known Quality, Efficiency and Cost.

To the motor car buyer it combines all the richness, all the luxurious and aristocratic appearance and texture of the finest leather with double the service, strength and satisfaction of so called "genuine" leather.

Keeping it From the Public

By William R. Sill

TEN thousand dollars a year is not an unusual salary for a great corporation to pay its publicity manager nowadays; not so much for the publicity he secures for his principals, as for the undesirable publicity he manages to keep out of the public prints. The same, to a surprising degree, applies to the theatre. A good story will always commend itself to an editor, but to keep an editor from printing a good story is the hard job.

Accidents on the stage, for instance, are things that no theatre ever wants advertised.

As a case in point, there was recently a dress rehearsal in one of the greater New York playhouses. In the scene being staged, eight fire horses were used, drawing fire apparatus on a revolving platform. Thirty-two musicians were in the pit, and some eighty chorus girls and boys and principals were seated in the front rows of the orchestra. On the stage were as many more chorus girls, all watching the horses in rehearsal.

Suddenly a mare attached to the hose cart, broke away from her harness, and with a leap started for the front of the stage. In a second her fore feet were over the footlights, and dangling over the heads of the musicians. There was instant excitement, growing into alarm as the other horses began to rear and kick, lunging out at the people on the stage. The musicians dropped their instruments and sought safety; the girls in the audience screaming, falling over seats, and tearing their flimsy skirts. Will Rogers, the Oklahoma cowboy, who was on the stage with his lariats, bounded forward and lassoed the mare, who by this time was half-way into the pit, and then leaped on her head, holding her down.

Now this was a good story—a real, near tragedy in a theatre, and a rescue by a real cowboy, but I called every person present, and begged them under no circumstances to relate this incident to anyone. It would have kept hundreds of persons away from the theatre if they had thought that at any performance a frightened horse might dash down among them.

One night when Kismet was playing at the Knickerbocker Theatre, in New York, the magician passed his lighted lamp beneath his coat as usual. But on that night, probably because the lamp had been supplied with more fuel than ordinarily, it doubled its flame and burned the lad frightfully, penetrating both of his shirts, and to this day scarring his breast. The youngster, however, showed extraordinary presence of mind. Covered with smoke, he bowed as though it were part of his act, and in intense pain got off the stage, and there fell in a heap, unconscious.

The press representative was eager that nothing of the incident should get out, lest it create the impression that fire was liable to occur at any time in the theatre. It so happened that a number of newspaper men were present, but so well did the magician conceal his sufferings that none of them suspected or was informed of the accident, and consequently no paper printed a word of it.

Frank J. Wilstach, general press representative for the Shuberts, was once on a time at Dreamland, Coney Island, when Joe Ferari, the animal man, warned him that under no circumstances would it be advisable to attempt to take a photograph of the leopards. These leopards were being put through their paces by a French lady trainer, and she had no idea of obeying these orders, as she had a great desire to have a photograph taken of herself surrounded by the beasts, to send to relatives in France. So, one day she inveigled the management into having a picture taken at the noon hour, when no one was around.

The posing was done, with the lady in the arena, and the brutes grouped artistically around her. Bang, went the flashlight, and zip, went two leopards, over the top of the cage and into the orchestra, and then out into the arena. The photographer and his associates beat it, and it took over four hours to get the leopards back into their cages. The story, telling how easy it was for animals like that to get into the arena, never got into the papers.

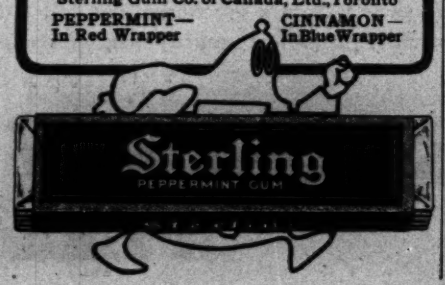
PEPPERMINT—In Red Wrapper
CINNAMON—In Blue Wrapper



MANY people are asking today how it could happen that half the world is plunged into a hell of war. And then, perhaps,—do wars merely happen, anyway?

In this respect, it is interesting to note that an American woman, qualified to speak with authority, believes that one scarlet spot would never have blotted our history if her mother had not happened to read certain books. She is Mrs. Abby Gardiner Sharp,—the only survivor of the Spirit Lake Massacre in Iowa.

Mrs. Sharp was found, recently, on the porch of her cottage, only a few yards from the strong-walled cabin of her father, which seems in as good condition today as it was on the morning in 1857 that it became famous.

"You can not make blanks here and there in a life," she commented, with dimming eyes, "and leave out all its terrible and tragic experiences. In war-ridden Europe, there are many innocent people who will suffer, just as I did. Those who are spared are more to be pitied than those who are laid low.

"The Indian was the uneducated barbarian; but the belligerents in Europe are educated barbarians. The Indian had no Bible—no guide but his own 'untutored mind.' Over there, they who are supposed to lead in civilization, have fallen below the level of the savage."

One wintry morning four years prior to the Civil War Abby Gardiner, a girl of thirteen, saw a band of Indians welcomed to her home, and helped prepare a breakfast for them, even at the cost of quite exhausting the family store of provisions. She saw the Indians seize the family stock of ammunition, and then deliberately murder her father, mother, little brother, married sister and two children. She, the only survivor, was carried off to captivity, with the cries of the dying babies, as they called to her, ringing in her ears. That night she spent among the Indians who were celebrating with a war dance the extinction of her family. By the next night they had killed thirty-eight people, the entire settlement, with the exception of Miss Gardiner, and three other young women who had been taken captive.

During the months that followed, one of these women was rescued, but the thirteen-year-old girl was obliged to see her other two friends tortured to death before her eyes. The long hair of one of them was braided into a whip lash, with which to quicken the steps of the girl when she lagged on the marches.

For three and a half months, Abby Gardiner wandered with the Indians, subject to their every whim. She carried a pack that she would not have believed she could have lifted, wading with it through snow and ice, in frozen clothes; lying down on the ground at night to sleep in the same clothes. Often she went for days without food—and yet she lived.

"There were thirty-eight Indians hanged by the government for the subsequent massacre of 1862, which Inkpaduta patterned upon his so successful Spirit Lake one," she said, reminiscently. "Lincoln pardoned all but thirty-eight of those convicted—the easterners, not understanding what a massacre was like, having interceded for the Indians! The task of pulling the rope that took the lives of all thirty-eight Indians was given to a boy who had lost his entire family in that massacre. If I had been given that opportunity, I would have done it, and gladly,—believing I was doing a good service to the world. I thank God now that I did not have the opportunity." But, rousing from a dreamy contemplation of the massacre monument before her door,—"we have to go into captivity to find out some things! We ought to understand evil well enough to know how to compete with it. We need to know what is in the heart and mind of an enemy! If my mother had not read all that fiction stuff down in New York—so much of James Fenimore Cooper—I don't believe there would have been any Spirit Lake Massacre!

"You know," she explained, "easterners looked upon the Indian as the Noble Red Man. My mother had that idea, and it was from reading so much of Cooper!

"When the Indians came to our house that morning, father realized that they intended to kill us. 'We are all going to lose our lives,' he said. His impulse was for us to defend ourselves, and at least kill a few of them before they accomplished their purpose. But mother interfered. She begged him to invite the Indians in and treat them kindly, and then, perhaps, they would spare our lives. Her counsel prevailed. And as ours was the first house they visited on the frightful expedition, there might have been no Spirit Lake Massacre, if we had only resisted, and discouraged them at the outset.

"There are always some who can see a little farther than anyone else," sighed Mrs. Sharp, "but if they can not get others to act with them, what can they do? When we did see, unmistakably, there was not even time to shut the door," pointing toward the open patch of sunlight framed in morning glory vines. "The Indians were right out there. Father died just here—and the rest were killed out of doors.

"How did I stand it? That is as much a mystery to me as to any. I had been protected from hardship all my life and did not know there was such a thing as evil in the world. I carried a pack on my back heavier than most that the squaws carried, and was otherwise made the victim of persecutions such as only man can invent. The Indians took all the settlement livestock with them, but only myself and one little pony survived to reach the Yanktons, where I was rescued. The weather was so bad that spring that several from the rescuing parties that tried to overtake us were frozen to death."

Her rescue, in the form of a purchase from the Indians, was carried out by a clever Christianized Indian, Horton-Ho-Washta, who, with two others, was sent by the state of Minnesota, at a cost of $10,000. Miss Gardiner was well on her way to St. Paul before she knew that she was not, in fact, the property of another tribe. She eventually was able to buy back the family place, which had been appropriated by a later settler, and has subsequently made it her home.

Another Stellar Aviator

MRS. HILDA R. HEWLETT was the first English lady to take out an aviation certificate. She won in a quick-starting contest at Brooklands, England, and was pilot No. 122 in the Royal Aero list of contestants held at the London Aerodrome, Hendon. Mrs. Hewlett, who is the wife of Mr. Maurice Hewlett, the novelist, is the only mother in the world who has taught her own son to fly. He is Sub-Lieutenant F. E. T. Hewlett, R. N., and won his certificate in the early part of 1912.

From Mill to Mayor

MISS CARRIE FROST of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, has made an unusual success of an unusual business, namely, the manufacturing of artificial flies for the use of anglers and other fishermen.

Beginning a few years ago by simply manufacturing the deceptive fly by hand for her father, a fisherman of local note, and for some of his friends, she now owns and operates a two story factory employing one hundred and fifty girls.

Aside from her exceptional business ability, Miss Frost is a charming woman, having a most pleasing personality, and a quiet unassuming manner.

For the "Never-Well —but Never-Sick"

Not well enough to enjoy living, yet not sick enough for the doctor—who does not know that dreary, depressing state of "semi-health!" Some of us get it occasionally—"the blues" we call it—others so often that they almost forget what it means to be normal and healthy.

With nerves on edge, digestion uncertain, the mind depressed, our efficiency is reduced day by day. Ambition becomes stunted, our interest in things grows half-hearted. The reason: Our ship of life carries too much cargo—we must unload or else get more power.

Have you ever considered what Sanatogen is able to do in just such cases? Know then that letter after letter from carefully observing physicians has told of the splendid effort of Sanatogen in giving fresh fuel to the overworked nerves, fresh building material to the fatigued cells, a fresh impetus to digestion and assimilation.

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TONIC

And what trained physicians observe—no less than 21,000 physicians have in writing approved the use of Sanatogen—the actual users of Sanatogen joyfully confirm. Richard LeGallienne, for instance, writes: "Several times I have found myself wondering why I was feeling more fit and then remembered I was taking Sanatogen."

Sir Gilbert Parker, the famous author and statesman, tersely sums up the benefits of Sanatogen when he says: "Sanatogen is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigor to the overworked body and mind."

That fresh vigor can be yours too if only you will try Sanatogen.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists, everywhere, in sizes from $1.00 up

AMERICA! the land where the mystery of manhood may be fully revealed; the one open gate today to a field of activities and opportunities unparalleled in the history of the world.

America!—the half-brother of all the world; the one place where character, common sense and industry continue to win over the older prejudices of race, creed or station.

KNOWLEDGE

NO successful corporation could afford to present, at a considerable cost, a nation-wide advertising campaign of this character without absolute knowledge of its real worth.

This announcement is based on knowledge, and you know knowledge only deals with fundamentals—facts.

Any other agency in advertising, save knowledge, must necessarily accept values and consequences through faith.

No man is born a skeptic, a doubter. He develops this trait. Man, after a long line of experiences, frequently changes his view with reference to investments—often verifies his belief by the experiences of others. So you see, it is natural, normal, not to accept all statements, all accounts.

But remember this: It is our opposing mental processes that often close the doors to Opportunity.

And remember this: It is the man who is constantly searching for success who is most likely to find it.

No man can doubt the soundness of this proposition or the value of this opportunity if he will but survey the proofs, for they are founded on a knowledge of the facts.

THRIFT

SOME strange, unthought-of moment often means more to a man, in after life, than the years that have passed.

Some important item of individual interest, self-interest, like this one, will mean more to you, if you follow it up, than pages and pages of promises or printed advice.

Interview the great army of failures and you will learn that they lack one potential element in success—thrift.

The difference, after all, between success and failure is locked up in the one small word—saving.

As a people we earn enough, and now, right now, of all the hours in human history, is the time for Americans to save.

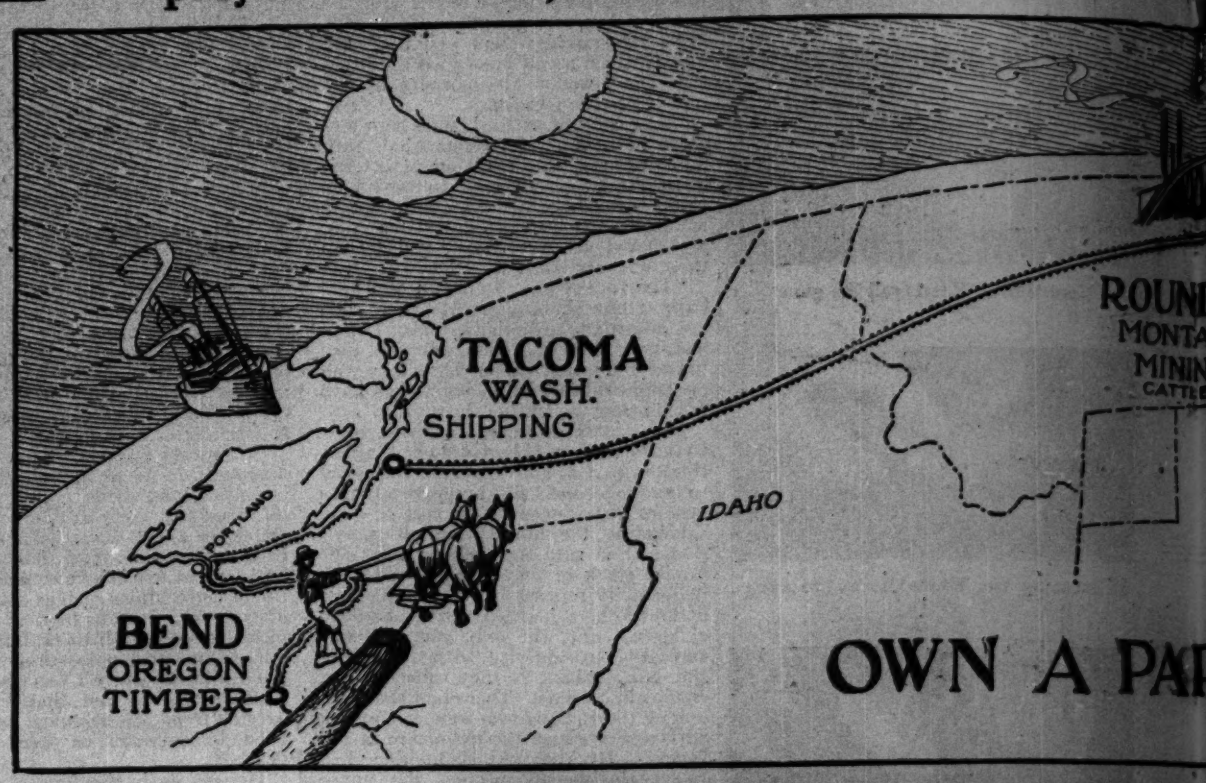
Americans will never witness a greater season for reward, nor will they ever have a better time to save, than now.

This announcement should teach thrift. And when we teach thrift, we educate in economy, inspire in industry—encourage every way. We are building securely.

With the possession of property, a man's mind automatically trends toward conservatism, the social instincts. He is less inclined to be rash, reckless.

Property sobers man into success. Ownership leads a man into position.

It is a patriotic privilege, an American duty, to encourage thrift—the idea of saving, of building permanently.



·THE·PROPOSITI

The proposition presented by The Northwest Townsite Company to you is a simple truth—success. The details, plans of payment (which are so arranged as to accommodate e all given in full in the book, "The Way to Win." (See coupon.)

Briefly, the plan is as follows: An expert, an authority on values, has gone ahead of you and selected choice properties tinental railroad, and offers you the opportunity of individually participating in the success of this big enterprise. Out of were selected, each one offering special and unusual advantages due to location or transportation facilities.

Having selected these twenty towns, the company evidenced its unbounded belief in the future of this country and t of these young cities.

OPPORTUNITY

MAN is the biggest part of opportunity.

Opportunity is of no consequence until man improves it. The great Kimberley diamond fields were a waste of supposedly worthless pebbles until man discovered them, cut them, and mounted them.

The inexhaustible resources of the great Northwest were opportunities unimproved.

Opportunity is only opportunity when we get in living correspondence with the situation that can bring success.

We can only grow big by keeping in vital communion with the opportunities that are offered. The multitude will not grasp the opportunity unless it knocks, but the wise man knows that opportunity is not a knocker. They have even put electric bells on the front door. You must push to get in.

When we look backward through the long corridor of years, and see the lost opportunities that rise before us like mocking fiends, we cry, "Too late! too late!"

These opportunities that have passed are but the lessons to teach us of the opportunities that are to come. For, be it remembered, history repeats itself.

After each and every great war, in each and every country, on the face of the globe, there has been a revival of opportunities.

And when the European war is over, we shall have what has always happened in history—a greater growth. We shall have the most favored spot in the known world for making a success.

Not a boom, not wild excitement, but that steady, sturdy growth that presages permanent prosperity.

And nowhere in this country will this prosperity prove more conspicuous than among the wonderful man-made and untouched resources of the great Northwest.

HISTORY

IF you will strip history of the accidental, the temperamental, of the common periods, the complex conditions; if you will eliminate any historical imagination, you will find, printed in bold, black letters on every leaf, the same story over and over again. History only repeats itself.

Since 1907 we have had conditions well known to every man.

In a book issued by The Northwest Townsite Company you will find all of the faded pages of the past restored as a matter of record—restored to prove the book is intended for a bolder task: it is intended to tell you what may be expected of tomorrow.

This book is not only interesting but instructive, and written by an authority—by one who has trudged the trail of the West, and known from individual experiences the opportunities along the route of The Northwest Townsite Company's properties.

You will find in this book nothing fanciful, no fiction. It is not "news from nowhere." It is information worth your while.

The creative, critical reader will find the author alert in his study of economic conditions in this country. He has placed before the reader historical knowledge as a handy reference to show that we are now nearing the greatest hour in the history of humans, and this hour happens to be high-noon in America.

With wool, hides, horses, mules and cattle in international demand;
With everything everywhere in the great Northwest growing bigger and better—growing steadily and surely, not booming,—

, a selection of five (5) cities should offer to the investor
fect security with the possibilities of unusual profits.

SUCCESS

YOU are reasonably sure of reaching the City of Success provided you pick out the right route.

The City of Success is at the end of a long, rough trail. The trouble is, most men cannot stand the forced march.

And it is so in investment. Most investors make the mistake of "biting off more than they can chew." Ambition assumes the responsibility of judgment.

When money is invested in anything, the investment is never satisfactory, nor is it a success, when it causes the investor much inconvenience or hardship.

The Northwest Townsite Company have a practical, conservative, equitable plan for the individual investor that is fully told in the book, "The Way to Win."

Aside from the investment interest, the commercial value of this book—"The Way to Win"—the author starts you to thinking for yourself on other subjects that are of personal interest and importance.

This two-page announcement is a reflection of his thoughts, a mere suggestion of the way his analytical mind works on the things that concern every live man or worthy woman.

MONEY

THE crushing-out process of poverty is a curse to this country. A man with money has multiplied opportunities to make for himself, to make of himself and to help humanity up the hill.

True, money has made men make mistakes; but the want of money has caused almost all of the crimes in this country.

Self-respect demands that a man make and that he save money. To make money is an acknowledged, respectable ambition—a practice of men who think in units of usefulness.

But the trouble is, we do not always save this money after we make it. And this fact is accountable for the introduction of the savings banks, the protective and provident institutions—the places for the encouragement of saving and investing.

When a man makes a substantial, reliable investment he supports this move by more moves in the right direction. It encourages him to want to increase his income, and correspondingly increase his investments. It makes a bigger man of any man to have the impetus of saving signaling him on to success—the impetus of wise investment.

Where on earth can you make a better investment than in fast-growing cities?

When real city lots, properly located, are bought on the right basis, they form an investment that follows in the footsteps of the men who have made more money, more success out of life, than all others.

HIGHEST AWARD WORLD'S FAIR

Country Town Sayings

By Ed. Howe, of Atchison

A LITTLE information picked up every day soon becomes an education; and a little moral teaching picked up every day soon becomes a sermon.

I have observed that my likes and dislikes do not attract great excitement. And how restless people are when I talk!

For every man fooled by a woman, probably twenty women are fooled by men.

The success of your rival is disagreeable; but stand it amiably, rather than advertise the fact that you are jealous.

When a thing goes wrong, and you call in an expert, he says: "It is easily fixed." But what a time he has fixing it!

Many a man who is calling for help might help himself.

You have no doubt blamed the people of Johnstown for their failure to heed the warning of a rotten dam. But is there no unheeded warning ringing in your ears at the present moment?

A polite man is a great missionary: I never meet a polite man that I do not resolve to be more like him.

Never believe more than half the story a man tells on his opposition.

About the only thing the poor enjoy as much as the rich, is love.

A great public outrage is rarely as serious or provoking to an individual as a smaller personal outrage.

People are very inquisitive; still, they manage to hide a good deal from each other. A fire breaks out in our community every few days from which I had not detected any smoke.

A grocer may smile when a customer takes an apple, but it's diplomacy; he doesn't have his heart in it.

It is an old saying that a man is as old as he feels. And you may depend upon it that a man feels as old as he is.

Occasionally a man regarded as a fool is quite successful, and has a good business or a good job, and you wonder how he did it. Nothing is easier, however, than to be mistaken in men.

Keeping It From the Public

One night during the run of Under Cover at the Cort Theatre, in New York, William Courtenay, who is supposed to toss a string of pearls to his pal waiting beneath the window, made a wild pitch, and the heavy jewels went into the audience and hit a man, seated near the front, in the forehead, cutting his skin deeply, and causing him to bleed profusely. The man was taken to a retiring room, and his wound dressed, and the press representative bent every effort, and successfully, to keep the story from the papers. Its publication would not have encouraged timid persons to occupy front row seats and expose themselves to the chance of being struck in the eye with smuggled pearls.

In one of his first cases where he appeared before the court of an adjoining state it was his fortune to be opposed by an attorney, a veritable giant in size, and possessor of a most intimidating manner. Going up to young Knox, the giant guffawed down upon him, "Are you the attorney opposing me? Why, I could put you in my vest pocket."

"Maybe you could," said the unabashed Knox; "but if you did so you would have more law in your pocket than you ever had in your head."

Odd Place-Names in U.S.A.

THE thriving cities, the picturesque streams and the rugged mountains of the United States have in numerous instances received their names for reasons calculated to give a shock to the National Board of Geographic Names. The most grotesque accidents and coincidences, the results of games or wagers, the grim efforts of the pioneer mind to be satirical at the expense of his new home, all have operated to determine the name by which proud municipalities or imposing physical features appear upon the map. In a general study of the origin and significance of place-names of this country, made by the United States Geological Survey, the following oddly given names have been picked out.

The naming of the populous city of Portland, Oregon, was decided by the tossing of a copper coin by two settlers, one from Portland, Maine, the other from Boston, Massachusetts. The Maine man won, else we should have had another great Boston on the Pacific.

The city of Tombstone, Arizona, was named as a bit of grim humor. Its finder had been advised, when starting on his prospecting tour, that he would "find his tombstone." In order that the prophecy might be fulfilled, he gave the name to the city he established.

The city of Bangor, Maine, bears the name of an old psalm tune which our forefathers sang to the tremor of a tuning-fork. The name was given by the Rev. Seth Noble, who represented the district in the Maine legislature.

Wheeling, the metropolis of West Virginia, owes its name to the circumstance of the Indians having displayed the head of a white man on a pole at this point. The name is from the Indian weal-ink, meaning "place of a human head."

One of the most distinctive names on the map of Colorado is Ouray. It has been applied to a city, a county and an imposing mountain. Yet the name means nothing more nor less than Willie, and is the result of the Ute Indians' attempt to translate this synonym of Harold and Percy into their own tongue.

The city of Norwalk, Connecticut, is said to have been so named because, when purchased from the Indians, the northern boundary of the land was to extend northward from the sea one day's walk, according to the Indian marking of the distance.

A town in Georgia rejoices in the strikingly original, but somewhat ambiguous designation of Nameless. The name was given from the fact that in a list of several hundred names submitted to the postoffice authorities not one was found satisfactory.

A town in Gunnison County, Colorado, possesses the eloquent name of Tin Cup, given because in its early days, when a mining camp, gold was so plentiful that it was measured in a tin cup.

The Calico mountain range in California was given its name from the variegated color of its rocks.

The city of Jacksonville, Illinois, was named for a prominent colored preacher, and is perhaps the largest community in the country named for a negro.

The city of Spartanburg, South Carolina, was so called from the rigorous, Spartan-like self-discipline practiced by the inhabitants during the Revolutionary War.

A stream in Ravalli County, Montana, is known as Weeping Child from the circumstance of an Indian child being carried off by a mountain lion, causing insanity in the mother.

Antelope County, in Nebraska, was so named in commemoration of the killing and eating of an antelope during the pursuit of some Indians by the pioneers.

The town of Deerfield, New Hampshire, was so named because, when the petition for the establishment of the town was pending, a Mr. Batchelder killed a deer, and upon presenting it to Governor Wentworth, obtained the act of establishment and the town name.

Hell Gate, the narrow pass in the East River at New York, was called by the Dutch hellegat, meaning "bright strait" or "clear opening." The name quickly suggested the present English form, which was regarded as more appropriate on account of the whirlpools which made navigation dangerous.

Sunny Sides of Business
By Frederick Hall

BY business humor is meant, of course, not the humor that one can sell, or hopes he can sell, but that branch of literature which deals with the more jovial aspects of business.

A large number of such stories begin, appropriately enough, at the bottom; they deal with the elementary transaction of getting and holding a place. There is the college graduate who offers himself as such at a manufacturing plant. "I fear we have no position for you," says the head of the firm. "You misunderstand me," answers the youth. "I don't want a position. I want a job." And he is at work in five minutes.

There is the other college graduate who astutely conceals his intellectuality and whose services are instantly accepted on the strength of his beginning, "I have come!"

Here may be inserted the observation that when an uneducated man makes a large fortune he almost invariably attributes his success to his lack of college education.

Returning to place hunting, there is the small boy who was greeted by the question, "Weren't you in here a week ago?"—"Exactly."—"And I told you I wanted an older boy, didn't I?"—"Yes, sir. That's why I'm here now."

One boy who had secured a job is reported to have grappled it to his soul with hooks of steel for some six weeks, and then suddenly appeared at his employer's desk. "What do you want?" he was asked. "Want me pay raised."—"What are you getting now?"—"T'ree dollars a week."—"Well, how much do you think you are worth?"—"I t'ink I'm wort' four dollars a week, an' I've been t'inkin' it for t'ree weeks; but I've been so rushed I ain't had time to speak about it."

By way of contrast, there was the farmer whose son had secured a place in the city, who wrote to inquire as to his progress. The reply he received was, "Dear Sir:—Your son sleeps in the store daytimes. I don't know where he spends his nights."

To revert to the side of industry, there was the old employee who defined his position as that of a doer. "You see," he explained, "when the governor wants something done he tells the cashier, and the cashier tells the bookkeeper, and the bookkeeper tells the assistant bookkeeper, and the assistant bookkeeper tells the chief clerk, and the chief clerk tells me. I haven't anybody to tell; so I have to do it."

But industry has its fitting limits. "Staying ten minutes after office hours will probably make a good impression," is the opinion of one authority; "but," he adds, "staying fifteen is likely to excite the suspicion that you are monkeying with your books."

As an extreme example of diligence in business, there was the man who hung in the window a card announcing, "Gone to get married—back in half an hour."

And there was the traveling salesman who declared that in four weeks he had had but one order, and that was from the house, to come home.

A somewhat better authenticated incident is that of an accidental meeting of the late F. Hopkinson Smith with a half-dozen traveling men. They had accepted him as one of the brotherhood, and were comparing hard luck stories, when he won their horrified but incredulous commiseration by the announcement that he had had but one order in three years. Later he confessed that his line was lighthouses.

Most of the jokes touching on high finance are marred by their cynicism, the following being offered as an example in Wall Street arithmetic:

10 mills make one trust;
10 trusts make one combine;
10 combines make one merger;
10 mergers make one magnate;
1 magnate makes all the money.

The intricacies of banking offer a natural field for humor. A husband had insisted that, for the sake of the business experience, his wife should have and manage a bank account of her own. A week later he came home one evening, to find her firmly convinced that the bank had become insolvent. "You understand these things, of course, better than I do," she conceded; "but I know that yesterday I wrote out a check for forty dollars, and today it came back marked 'No funds.'"

Insurance also has its mysteries. A young wife whose husband had suffered a fire loss, the adjustment of which was in controversy, confided to a friend that she had lost faith even in life insurance. "If George were to die," she declared, "I expect those adjusters would charge off so much for depreciation that the children and I wouldn't get one cent."

Most business humor has a more or less didactic flavor. The old-fashioned country store is subtly boosted in the story of the city shopper who rushed to the head floorwalker demanding that she be instantly shown a pair of shoestrings, some hairpins, a half-dozen handkerchiefs and a belt buckle. "Madam," he replied, "take the elevator to the eleventh floor for the shoestrings. The hairpin department is on the second. You will find the handkerchiefs at the extreme rear of the seventh, and the belt buckles are in the basement."

Similarly there is a story that teaches the unwisdom of too great absorption in detail. A drummer selling a filing system doubled on his track and called on a former customer. "Good morning," he said. "How is the filing system working?"—"Great!" answered the merchant. "Good!" said the salesman. "And how's business?"—"Business!" echoed the merchant. "Oh, we've stopped business to attend to the filing system."

But perhaps the most searching of all such stories is that of the Peanut Man. It has had a wide circulation, one city wholesale house having sent it out as the chief feature of an advertising circular. It runs thus:

In a small town, at a railroad station, a good, honest, hard-working man gave close attention to a peanut stand. He kept busy, watched his stock, was careful and earned his living. One day one of his customers who was interested in him said, "Why don't you add popcorn as a side line, increase your business, and double your profits?" He did so, and got nervous prostration. Moral.—He was a Peanut Man.

What Does She Want With the Vote?
By Madelaine Bridges

OH, what does she want with a vote?
She has troubles of her own—
There is n't a grievance afloat
Any worse than ills she has known—
As to lovers, and brothers and such,
Never mentioning husband, nor son,
Of men she knows surely as much
As must make her rejoice she 's not one!

Oh, what does she want with a vote?
A pertinent question is this:
Since each day we are hearing her quote
She has too much to do as it is;
What with maids that can cook, or that won't,
With maids that can't cook, or that will,
With maids that might suit her, but don 't—
Her worries a ledger would fill!

Oh, what does she want with a vote?
'Mid the ferment of politics set,
In her methods and modes, should we note
The ways of the rash suffragette?
Bold smashings of windows with stones;
Red torches aflame in the breeze—
Brisk breakings of masculine bones—
Will her making of laws be as these?

Oh what does she want with a vote?
The whim of a woman! I fear
'T is only because it 's remote,
She 's desiring to have it more near.
She will find it a burden to vote
'T would hang round her neck like a stone—
What, what does she want with a vote?
She has troubles enough of her own!

FOOD DEPARTMENT

By Phoebe Burbank

Cereals—Not For Breakfast Only

CEREALS come first on the list of vegetable foods. They are, because of their easy cultivation, more widely diffused over the world than any other food, and in point of numbers the cereals are readily first in the list of natural foods. Wheat, Oats, Rye, Barley, Rice, and Indian Corn are the principal cereals but the various preparations of these are almost innumerable. Until a few years ago we were only familiar with them in the form of breakfast foods and of course, breads. Now we have them in a wide variety for all kinds of cooking—we have them already cooked and sweetened, requiring only the addition of milk or cream before eating—and so have them ready, without any preparation at all, to take the place of toast or breadcrumbs in such dishes as Creamed Cauliflower or Baked Asparagus and so on.

Indeed a few packages of cereals on the pantry shelf at all times have become a necessity in the average family kitchen. Their food value depends on the amount of proteid, fat, starch and mineral contained and this of course varies with the cereal. Oatmeal, a purely breakfast food has a small amount of proteid, having 15.6 per cent, with 68 per cent starch. Buckwheat flour contains only 6 per cent proteid, but has 77 per cent starch. Wheat, which has probably the largest consumption of all, has eleven per cent proteid and seventy five per cent starch. It is very low in fat, however, having only one per cent and should be combined with fat in some form—butter, cream, or cheese, to make a perfect food.

Most of the breakfast cereals which come already prepared are packed in air-tight boxes which make perfect containers. When cereals are bought in bulk they must be kept in glass jars with air-tight tops and only a small quantity should be bought at a time.

Scotch Teacakes

1 egg — ½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar — Vanilla
½ cup melted butter — 1 cup rolled oats

Beat the egg until very light adding the sugar during the process. Add the other ingredients and drop from the point of a spoon on well greased pan. Spread flat in circles and bake in a rather slow oven twelve minutes.—Mrs. L. B., Piermont, N. Y.

Rolled Oats Cookies

1 cup sugar — 1 tablespoon vinegar
1 cup butter — 3 cups rolled oats
1 cup lard — 3 cups flour
2 tablespoons sweet milk — 1 teaspoon soda
1 heaping teaspoon baking powder — 1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon cinnamon — 1 cup raisins

Cream the sugar with the shortening and add the other ingredients (the soda dissolved in a little water, and the raisins). Mix thoroughly, drop with teaspoon on baking sheet.—Mrs. J. T., West Richfield, Ohio.

Bran Cookies

½ cup butter — 1 teaspoon salt
1 cup brown sugar — 2 teaspoons baking powder
1 egg — 1 cup chopped figs or raisins
2 tablespoons milk — Flour enough to roll out

Cream the butter and sugar, add the egg well beaten, milk and bran with salt and baking powder. Beat thoroughly, add fruit and enough flour to roll out. Cut out, sprinkle with sugar and grated nutmeg and bake in a quick oven.—Mrs. F. G. J., Waltham, Mass.

Whole Wheat Fruit Bread

1 cup milk — ¼ cup sugar
1 cup water — 1 cake yeast
1 teaspoon salt — ¼ cup raisins
Whole wheat flour — ¼ cup dates (stoned)

Scald the milk, add the salt and when lukewarm the dissolved yeast, stir in enough flour to make a soft dough. Beat well and stand in a warm place until light and spongy. Then add the raisins and dates (floured) and enough flour to make the dough stiff. Knead, mold into loaves put into greased pans and let stand until light. Brush the top with milk and bake in a moderate oven over forty minutes.—Mrs. W. P. B., Cleveland, Ohio.

Corn Flake Macaroons

1 big cup toasted corn flakes — Whites of 2 eggs
½ cup sugar — Salt
½ cup cocoanut

Beat well the whites of eggs. Beat the sugar, corn flakes, salt and cocoanut. Mix. Drop by teaspoonfuls in a greased pan and bake five minutes.

Afternoon Tea Bread

2 cups bran — ½ cup molasses
1 cup entire wheat flour — ½ cup water
½ teaspoon salt — 2 cups milk
1 teaspoon baking soda

Cook in two pans in a slow oven.

Colonial Maple Cake

2 cups crushed maple sugar — 2 eggs
1 cup honey — Flour
1½ cups buttermilk — Spices
Salt — 3 cups currants
1 cup (scant) butter — ½ cup citron
1 dosen plums — 1 teaspoon soda
1 cup preserved gooseberries

Melt the sugar and cool before using. Add the honey, milk, a pinch of salt and the butter (softened). Whip to a cream then add the eggs, well beaten, and flour enough to make a stiff batter. (The soda should be added to the flour.) Prepare the currants, sliced citron, any desired spices and the plums. Dredge with flour and fold into the mixture. Lastly add the gooseberries (any other preserved fruit will do). Bake in paperlined pans. —Mrs. H. V. J., St. Louis, Mo.

Apple Dumplings

Biscuit dough — Sugar
Apples — Flour

Make a fairly rich biscuit dough. Pare and slice some rather tart apples. Roll the dough to the thickness of half an inch. Cover with the sliced apples and roll up like a jelly cake. Cut off in slices about ¾ inch thick and place in a baking pan. (Not too close together.)

Mix in a saucepan one cup sugar and one large tablespoon flour. To this add gradually one pint boiling water and cook until clear stirring constantly. Dip this sauce flavored to taste over the dumpling and place in oven or steam cooker and cook rather more than half an hour. If cooked in a steam cooker place in oven to brown slightly.—Mrs. J. B., Wasco, Calif.

All he had to start with was a cold—but the results of that cold would have drained the bank account dry if he hadn't been far-sighted when he was well. Every man is sick sometime. Heart disease and Bright's disease and rheumatism and pneumonia and colds and indigestion and nervous prostration—one or more of them gets every man sometime. They give but little warning. Act now—protect your bank account—

CONGOLEUM
ART-RUGS

Beauty and Service at Low Cost

CONGOLEUM Art-Rugs have had an even greater success than we predicted. American housewives have given them a hearty welcome, for they fill perfectly a long felt want in the home—real beauty and service at low cost. It took us over a year to invent and make the machinery to manufacture these Art-Rugs. We scoured the country to get leading rug designers to lay out the exquisite patterns. The result is a richness of coloring and a refinement of appearance heretofore impossible to find in low-priced rugs.

Waterproof—Washable—Sanitary

With these added features in Congoleum Art-Rugs we still maintain the wonderful qualities which have made Congoleum products superior to all other similar goods.

All Congoleum Rugs are waterproof throughout. The way to keep them clean is not by dusty beating, but by mere washing with a mop and water. They insure the utmost cleanliness and add in an unusual degree to the brightness and sanitation of the home. They also lie flat without fastening.

For Every Room in the House

The great beauty of Congoleum Art-Rugs makes them appropriate for living rooms and dining rooms. They give a delightful touch of color to bed rooms, and their sanitary qualities make them ideal for nurseries. In the kitchen and bath room, water will never affect them. And on the porch, neither sun nor rain will fade them.

Sizes and Prices

Congoleum Art-Rugs are seamless and are made in three sizes and eight designs of seven colors each. Prices are as follows:

6 feet x 9 feet, $4.50 each 9 feet x 10½ feet, $8.00 each
9 feet x 12 feet, $9.00 each

Regular Line of Congoleum Rugs

Our regular line of Congoleum Rugs presents a wide range of sizes and many attractive designs,—and offers the least expensive manner of tastefully covering floors. These Rugs are all washable and sanitary. No beating or cleaning—water and a mop are all you need. They lie flat without fastening and never curl up or "kick up" at the edges.

Congoleum Rug Borders

Don't forget our beautiful Congoleum Rug Borders. These look exactly like quartered oak flooring. They are not like hand painted imitations as they are printed from the actual wood itself

For the borders of a room outside of a rug, Congoleum Rug Borders will give the effect of a real hardwood floor at a surprisingly low price. Much better than painting or staining—make old floors look like new. Made in rolls 36 inches and 24 inches wide, selling at 45c. and 35c. per yard, respectively.

Congoleum-By-The-Yard

We also make over thirty patterns of Congoleum Floor Covering by the yard. These come 72 inches wide and are waterproof, rot-proof and need no fastening.

Be sure the name Congoleum is on the back

This is your real protection. Congoleum Rugs, Rug Borders and Congoleum-by-the-yard have made such a tremendous success that they are being widely imitated. They cannot be equalled, but in certain superficial details there is often a similarity of appearance. Therefore, insist on seeing the name CONGOLEUM on the back.

Handsome Rug Color Chart Free
